Nasser Vows Liberation Near

CAIRO (AP) — President Gamal Abdel Nasser told a cheering audience Saturday that liberation of Arab territories seized by Israel in the June 1967 war is approaching. In his first public appearance since returning from medical treatment in the Soviet Union, Nasser addressed a session of the Arab Socialist Union National Congress at Cairo University. Nasser gave a generally low-keyed statement however, with few notes of patriotic fervor.

The president drew applause with a tribute to the Egyptian armed forces and their "constantly increasing ability to meet their responsibilities."

Sacred Duty

He declared that the armed forces constitute "our basic fundamental hope" for eventual liberation of areas seized by Israel.

Nasser declared that such liberation is a "sacred duty" which he said would be the third and final stage of the army's rehabilitation.

"It is both our right and duty to mobilize all our efforts for this liberation," he said.

The struggle will be difficult, he added, because Egypt was facing not merely Israel but also those who support and back Israel. The phrase is his usual way of referring to the United States.

Second Stage

"Rebuilding the armed forces is the way and the method for the liberation of our occupied lands," he said. The army's temporary superiority is ended. It ended last September. We are now in the second stage of repelling aggression and this will be followed by the stage of liberation."

Nasser gave no dates nor did he suggest any tentative timetable.

Nasser told the Congress that both the Republican and Democratic American presidential candidates are competing for the Jewish vote with promises to Israel.

Nasser referred to both Hubert Humphrey and Richard Nixon by name in reply to a question from the floor of the congress' first regular session.

Nasser was asked if he thought there were any pro-Arab leaders in America.

Nasser replied: "Humphrey was here once. So was Nixon. They heard our views on the subject of Palestine and seemed to understand them."

"I met each of them personally and explained these views to them."

"However, the question of presidential elections is something else. Each candidate wants to win and for this all means are good."

THE GOLDBERG POLICY

Africa

In the sixth of a series of articles outlining a new foreign policy for the U.S., Arthur Goldberg strongly urges U.S. disengagement from remaining economic, military and scientific ties with South Africa in a shrewdness of that nation's intensified and unyielding policy of apartheid. Today's article appears on Page 3.

Party Rift Threat To Smith

Smith

SALISBURY, Rhodesia (AP) — Prime Minister Ian Smith emerged Saturday stronger in his struggle against Britain but shakier at the helm in his own country.

Ruling of the Rhodesian High Court appellate division Friday that Smith's government has achieved legal status gave him long-awaited internal legal recognition.

At the same time, swelling revolt in the ranks of the ruling Rhodesian Front while not at this stage seriously threatening Smith's leadership, could shatter party unity.

Smith came to power by being more right-wing than his predecessor, Winston Field. Now he is under attack by opponents more right-wing than he is.

Two months ago he dismissed the leader of the right-wing faction, Internal Affairs Minister William Harper from the cabinet. This week, Harper's colleague, External Affairs Minister Lord Graham, quit the cabinet because of differences with Smith.

The split in the party was laid bare when Smith's plan for a new constitution got a majority of only 11 votes in a total of 423 at the party congress. Those opposing the plan wanted more entrenched power for whites. A party official said it passed only because of 70 abstentions.

Right-winger Robin James will propose at a party meeting in Salisbury Monday that the proposals accepted by congress be rejected because they do not insure the survival of the white man in Rhodesia.

Nevertheless, Smith's personal popularity insures him widespread support in the party and the country and no one at present seems likely to displace him.

He strongly defended his constitutional proposals Saturday as permitting Africans to advance on merit.

Tanzania Funds Cut From South Africa

DAR ES SALAAM, Tanzania (AP) — The government banned all payments by Tanzanians to South Africa starting Saturday.

A statement said Tanzania banned trade with South Africa five years ago as a "demonstration of distaste for the policies perpetrated by the apartheid regime." At the time, however, it was felt it would be impractical to forbid payments connected with transactions such as insurance, tourism and education.

"This anomalous situation has now been corrected," the statement added.

Biafra Plans Exile Seat, Guerrillas

Aid Flights Resumed

GENEVA (AP) — The International Red Cross Committee said Saturday it had resumed flights of food and medicine to starving Biafrans Friday night despite the increasing danger.

The committee suspended flights two days ago after learning that one of two available aircraft was bombed and damaged and the other was too close to the combat zone.

DAKAR, Senegal — A Biafran government-in-exile is now in the planning stages following a policy decision taken last week by the four African countries that recognize the secessionist state.

The French government, which favors Biafra, has been closely involved in discussions of the plan. If formed, the government will sit in Libreville, capital of Gabon.

DE GAULLE PROMISE

A memorandum submitted to the leaders of the four countries — the Ivory Coast, Gabon, Tanzania and Zambia — admitted that a federal victory is now possible, and therefore their best policy, it said, would be to encourage guerrilla warfare in Biafra.

French president de Gaulle's promise of eventual recognition of Biafra has enhanced the prospects of a government-in-exile being formed.

ADVANCED STAGE

A cabinet minister in one of the former French West African territories said the four countries which have recognized Biafra would have no alternative but to aid Biafran guerrillas if France also recognized her.

Meanwhile, preparations for guerrilla warfare have reportedly reached an advanced stage in some areas close to the present firing-line and also in countries closely associated with the Biafran war effort.

A build-up of arms and ammunition, food, and medical supplies is continuing.

WINTERBURN, Alta. (CP) — A jaguar which escaped Saturday from captivity mauled one person, apparently without causing serious injury.

The cat broke out of a canine club at Winterburn on the outskirts of Edmonton. Police warned residents in the area to use caution if they see the jaguar.

France's Quebec Man Given Higher Status

PARIS (Reuters) — Pierre de Menthon, French consul-general in Quebec, has been promoted minister plenipotentiary, an official announcement said Saturday.

De Menthon now is the most senior diplomat in Canada.

'Secret Agent'

Itinerary Watched By French Embassy

OTTAWA (CP) — The French embassy here was informed of the activities of Philippe Rossillon, described by Prime Minister Trudeau as a "secret agent of France," from the time he arrived in Manitoba until he left Canada, an embassy spokesman said Saturday.

However, the embassy was not aware in advance that he was coming to Canada, the spokesman said.

He said the French consul in Winnipeg provided the embassy with details of the visit last month and Rossillon's activities.

The spokesman said he believes the external affairs department here must also have been informed of Rossillon's activities by department officials in Winnipeg.

after the ambassador in Ottawa, Pierre Siraud.

No immediate official comment on de Menthon's promotion was available. But observers here saw the move as a continuation of France's policy of strengthening ties with French-speaking communities.

They noted that the appointment came very shortly after Prime Minister Trudeau's accusation that a French official, acting as an "agent," had "agitated" among French-speaking Canadians in Manitoba, but they said they did not feel the appointment was in any way a retaliation.

A Canadian government spokesman said it is assumed in Ottawa that the de Menthon promotion is merely a change in personal rank.

It would not affect his job status in Canada as consul-general. Such a change could only be made with the agreement of the Canadian government.

Plaintive Calls Clue

Police 'Hero' Linked to Murder

HOLLYWOOD, Fla. (AP) — Police Saturday charged that the man who called headquarters and said "Please catch me!" after killing a 12-year-old girl was the policeman who later "found" the child's body.

A warrant charging Robert John Erler, 34, with the Aug. 12 murder was issued and a man-hunt begun just nine days after Erler quit the Hollywood police force for what he termed personal reasons.

Erler was accused of killing Marilyn Clark with five shots in the head.

Detectives matched routine tape recordings of Erler's patrol car conversations with tapes of the anonymous caller who began the Aug. 12 conversation by saying: "I just killed three people."

Hollywood police refused to disclose the chain of evidence that led to Erler, but police in neighboring Dania, where Erler had worked briefly as a patrolman, said they supplied the missing links.

Dania Police Chief Donald Parton said the break came when the girl's mother, Dorothy Clark, 42, of Clarkston, Ga., recalled Thursday she had met a man in a khaki uniform with a round shoulder patch on Dania Beach the night of the shooting.

Mrs. Clark also was shot six times and remains in a Fort Lauderdale, Fla., hospital, recovering from temporary amnesia and facial paralysis.

She is still unaware her child is dead.

Parton said Mrs. Clark said she had gone with the man to a trailer and that he (Parton) had bought such a trailer Sept. 1 from Erler. He said Dania police wore khaki uniforms when Erler was an officer there and Erler still had his uniform in the trailer.

After Dania patrolman Henry Peterman recalled, "He's the hero—he found the body in the industrial park,"

Parton went to Hollywood police.

When he reported finding Marilyn's body at 6:30 a.m. Aug. 12, Erler told detectives he had been stopped by a man and woman who had spotted the girl's body in a clump of roadside weeds. He said the couple had left before he had obtained their identification.

Eight minutes later the mother was found, near death, in her car four miles away.

Attorneys Probe Butterflies

Charity Fraud Laid to White Sox Owner

By RICHARD COOPER
Los Angeles Times

CHICAGO — The very rich, as F. Scott Fitzgerald said, are very different from the rest of us and as are their problems. Consider the plight of Arthur Allyn and his $128,000 butterfly collection.

Allyn, who is a major stockholder in the Chicago White Sox baseball team and the investment firm of Francis I. Dupont and Co., acquired 3,000 fragile specimens during his life as a lepidopterist and several years ago reportedly gave them all to charity.

A blameless end to a harmless hobby, one might have thought, but the state of Illinois now has charged the butterfly gift and others by Allyn and his family abused the laws of the state and perpetrated "a sham and a fraud upon the public."

The accusations were contained in a civil suit filed in the circuit court of Cook County against Allyn, his brother John, their mother, Nelle Allyn, and two other officers of the Allyn Foundation, a non-profit corporation.

The foundation was incorporated under Illinois law in 1949, according to the state attorney general, for the stated purpose of providing funds for various worthy causes "including the encouragement of art, and the prevention of cruelty to children and animals."

Its present assets include securities worth more than $1,000,000 and the butterfly collection, which Arthur Allyn claimed as a federal income tax deduction, according to the complaint filed by Assistant Attorney General John Gaughan and Richard Short.

In their view, the chief beneficiaries of the foundation have been the Allyn themselves, not the general public or any broad segment of it.

The butterflies, for example, bring the foundation no income and they remain "in the possession of the donor for his private use and pleasure" according to the complaint. It demands that they be sold and the proceeds invested to bring the foundation income.

The principal activities of the Allyn Foundation are granting cash scholarships to college students and making gifts to colleges, boys clubs, camps, and similar charitable organizations, the complaint says.

Yet the scholarships are granted only to relatives of persons who work for Francis I. Dupont and Co., the White Sox and other companies in which members of the Allyn family are officers and directors, the state contends.

Thus, the scholarships are "in fact a private benefit to the profit-making corporations ... in the guise of charitable activities," the complaint declares, "conferring no benefit to the public."

The scholarship program should be restructured under court order to benefit a general group of students, the complaint says.

The foundation is also charged with making sizable loans to Allyn-connected firms in violation both of Illinois law and of the foundation's articles of incorporation.

The complaint quotes the articles as specifying that "no part of the net earnings or any property of the corporation shall inure to the benefit of any private stockholder, individual, or member."

Loans totalling $450,000 dollars were made by the foundation over a period of years to Arthur Allyn, the complaint alleges. It requests a court order compelling repayment of the loans with interest.

The suit requests that the foundation's charter be dissolved if it fails to cease its allegedly improper activities, and its assets distributed to other charities by the court.

This apparently is a move to prevent the foundation from turning back its assets to the Allyn family.

Members of the family could not be reached for comment.

supplies is in progress. Blockade busters nightly land supplies in Biafra from Lisbon, Libreville and Sao Tome.

At least three large arms dumps are reportedly being established north and north-east of Owerri, a landing-strip until recently used by the Biafrans, and in the bush area not far from Aba, which was recently retaken by federal forces.

Biafran labor is being forcibly recruited to hack away at the bush, wherever possible, to build primitive airstrips.

MORE FLIGHTS

According to reliable reports in Lisbon and Libreville, the number of aircraft flying into Biafra in the next few days is likely to double. Until last week there had been up to 10 planes a night for "mercy relief" and as many more for "other supplies."

The French airlift from Libreville air base is clearly growing. Last week the number of flights increased considerably to include several cargo loads — one in every four — of "ordnance stores." The included ammunition and small weapons.

Nervousness Among Crowds A Blood Sugar Problem

Dear Dr. Moir: Your note to Mrs. B.H. recently, about her troubles, brought mind that our daughter had symptoms like hers — fatigue, faintness, nervousness in crowds.

For years doctors said it was mental. Then a neighbor who had low blood sugar recommended a blood test. That was her trouble, and a high protein diet brought her back to life in three months. Today she is a ball of fire.

Doctors know low blood sugar acts like mental depression, so why in the world do they not test for that before recommending a psychiatrist?—E.M.

There can be some overlapping of symptoms. Usually it is not too difficult to tell the difference, but no two cases of anything ever turn out to be identical.

The low blood sugar syndrome, however, is much more prevalent than we used to think.

Your Good Health and doctors more and more are using the sugar tolerance test to identify this trouble.

Dear Dr. Moir: I find shaving lotion to be refreshing and stimulating but wonder whether it has beneficial or harmful effects on the skin?—P.H.

The alcohol and other ingredients have a tingling, refreshing effect, and that's the purpose of shaving lotion — that and to make you smell pretty. Otherwise these lotions have neither beneficial nor harmful effects with two exceptions: the alcohol may be drying, and in some instances an individual may have an allergic reaction. If neither of these troubles develops, use as you prefer.

Dear Dr. Moir: What causes my boy's legs to hurt all the time? Is it because he is growing? He is 17 and his legs always seem to hurt around the knees?—J.E.

This is nothing to guess about, but just growing doesn't cause pain. Take him to your doctor to examine him for the various possibilities: Rheumatic fever, a defect in bone growth, injury, faulty feet, rheumatoid arthritis — there are many possibilities.

Dear Dr. Moir: Which is best to rest the eyes — warm or cold applications?—Mrs. J.W.S. Whichever feels better.

Pressure Urged Against South African Cancer

U.S. Must Shun Apartheid

By ARTHUR J. GOLDBERG

In light of South Africa's unyielding and intensified policy of apartheid—an abhorrent to the U.S. commitment to equality for all races—the United States government immediately should disengage itself from remaining economic, military and scientific ties with that country.

The U.S. has long recognized that South African race policies offend human dignity today and might threaten peace tomorrow. It has long sought through diplomatic channels to induce changes in South African racial policies. Unfortunately, efforts have had little impact of consequence.

The South African government has ignored representations while continuing to build its repugnant system of total racial segregation—apartheid. It has increased its suppression of democratic liberties for its people, blacks and whites alike.

Now, even at some cost to itself, the U.S. government should take steps which would visibly disengage it from South Africa.

By so doing it will protect its moral and political position in the world. It will also lend practical support to those who are working toward the reconciliation and equality of the races in South Africa.

And it will strengthen the defence of American interests in the rest of Africa and the non-white world—including the high level there of U.S. investments and trade.

Among these fast-growing, large-magnitude economic American interests, are oil in Libya and Nigeria, copper in Zambia, rubber and iron ore in Liberia, bauxite in Ghana. Americans often overlook the fact that the value of these interests in Africa north of Rhodesia now substantially exceeds U.S. economic interests in South Africa. And they tend also to overlook the political value of fostering the goodwill of more than 30 black African governments representing 150,000,000 people. This should not be.

I propose the following major government steps: Arms embargo. Stricter enforcement of the South African arms embargo including a ban on sales of American "dual-purpose" items such as trucks and executive-type planes which can be used by their military.

THE
POLICY

Close loopholes such as the recent authorization for sale of American components in some "nonresponse" military equipment sold to South Africa by other countries.

The U.S. should use its influence to halt such sales by Japan, France and other countries. In the United Nations Security Council, it should see that such violations are cited by name if they do not cease. By so doing, it could help assure that orders not filled by American suppliers are not thereby lost to foreign competitors.

research and communications vessels as well as navy ships. Economic ties. Export Import Bank loans and investment guarantees for South Africa should be disallowed across the board. The current case-by-case consideration should be discontinued.

The United States government should actively discourage private loans and investment by American businessmen and bankers in South Africa. Those who engage in such enterprises are profiting from and strengthening a system which is built on racism.

U.S. commerce department trade promotion publications for South Africa should be discontinued.

The United States sugar quota for South Africa should be abolished.

It also should support a realistic and peaceful UN program of bringing independence to the territory of Southwest Africa now illegally held by South Africa.

As in the case of South Africa, I urge visible disengagement from Portugal to the Portuguese-ruled African territories of Angola, Mozambique and Portuguese Guinea.

The U.S. should make it an announced policy to reject AID investment guarantees for Portuguese African ventures. It should also reject Export-Import Bank participation in Portuguese Africa in the future.

As a result of UN Security Council action, the U.S. has embarked upon a similar policy of disengagement and disassociation with regard to Rhodesia. It should under no circumstances relax support for this UN embargo.

All that I propose with respect to southern Africa is peaceful action. I do not advocate the use of force; on the contrary, I oppose it. But at the same time that force is rejected, more than words must be offered to prove moral abhorrence of the racist cancer in southern Africa.

The U.S. must take all peaceful and practical steps, within the capacity of government, to help stop the spread of that cancer, and with all reasonable speed, to eradicate it.

Briton Looks at France, in 1921:

This Passion for Pinpricks

LONDON (Reuters)—A 1921 attack on French policies by a British foreign secretary, published Sunday, charged Paris with the "relentless promotion of French prestige and the gratification of private, generally monetary and often social, interests or ambitions."

The British minister was Lord Curzon, who in an official memorandum spoke of French policy as "this insatiable intrigue, this passion for pinpricks."

The memorandum, commenting coolly on French proposals for a defensive bilateral alliance, contrasted "the British habit of endeavouring to deal with the current problems of diplomacy as they arise on the merits of the particular case, and the French practice of subordinating even the most trivial issues to general considerations of expediency."

French policy was "based on far-reaching plans for the relentless promotion of French prestige and the gratification of private, generally monetary and often social, interests or ambitions, only too frequently pursued with a disregard of ordinary rules of straightforward and loyal dealing which is repugnant and offensive to normal British instincts," the memorandum said.

It described the "fear of a resuscitated and revengeful Germany" as an evident poison in Anglo-French relations.

The memorandum was published in Volume XVI of Documents on British Foreign Policy, which deals with questions of German reparations and the Upper Silesia question in 1921 and 1922.

Impossible Pie

POSSIBLY THE LEAST responsible plank in the by-election campaign platform of Mr. T. C. Douglas is his intention to seek a federal feasibility study of a land link between Vancouver Island and the Mainland.

Some day it may come. But the NDP leader must know full well that for many years ahead Canada has much more urgent uses for the millions upon millions of dollars that a link of causeways, bridges or tunnels would cost. He must also know that—especially in its present austerity mood—the Trudeau government is not apt to pour money, at his urging, into a wasted study. Nor should it, when it is cancelling programs that mean employment, as one would think Mr. Douglas would be the first to say.

Mr. Robert Strachan, the provincial NDP leader, has chimed in that without a land link to the mainland, Vancouver Islanders are behind a tariff wall: they must pay a fee to get goods or people off and on to the Island. This is true, and to some extent no doubt the development of the Island is impeded by it. But do not most Islanders live where they do by choice, and think it worth the money? Doesn't Mr. Strachan?

It is true also that we are partly cut off from the recreational and cultural life of the Lower Mainland, the mainstream of events in British Columbia as Mr. Strachan puts it. But in this respect there is a possibility of improving the situation without making an expensive study of the physical feasibility of building a road across the Strait of Georgia.

Mostly, we are cut off because the B.C. Ferries do not provide late-night service. To do so, and permit Islanders to attend evening events in Vancouver and return home without staying overnight, would be uneconomical as far as the ferry authority is concerned. But since the ferries can very well be regarded as part of British Columbia's highways and bridges system, there are grounds for thinking that a loss should be acceptable for such service.

This, however, is a matter for provincial politics. The impossible pie Mr. Douglas is offering is in the federal sky.

A Grave Liability

AN APPARENTLY simple B.C. court decision in an automobile case in which a minor was involved in an accident injuring a gratuitous passenger has created a precedent which may have wide ramifications and is of deep importance to all parents or guardians of minor drivers.

The case Causey vs. McCarron showed that the defendant was a minor driving the car of his parents. The court found that the accident was due to deficient brakes and a lack of care on the part of the minor.

Gross negligence which would have made the defendant's insurance liable for the damages was not proved.

The court however used Section 46 of the B.C. Motor Vehicle Act to hold the parents responsible, and in contrast to Section 70 of the same act which would have excused them from liability.

The clause which put the onus on the parents was:

"In case a minor is living with or as a member of the family of his parent or guardian, the parent or guardian is civilly liable for loss or damage sustained by any person through the negligence or improper conduct of the minor in driving or operating on any highway, a motor vehicle entrusted to the minor by the parent or guardian."

According to the court it would have been necessary for the parent or guardian in this case to prove that the car had not been entrusted to the minor or driven with the parent or guardian's consent.

The parent or guardian, who may believe he is adequately protected by insurance, in this case found that this was not so. The blame was on the parent or guardian just because the minor had been given permission to use the car, and the parent or guardian's insurance made no recognition of such a happening.

In the case of a minor owning a car that is registered in his or her own name and is not covered by the parent's insurance, the latter is still liable under the court decision.

Officials of the B.C. Insurance Commission and the Motor Vehicle Branch admit that things can happen under the existing regulations.

While the Motor Vehicle Branch will not permit the registration of a vehicle to a person under 18 years of age unless the application for registration is countersigned by the parent or guardian, this does not preclude the possibility of a minor making a wrong admission of age statement, or indeed of taking a car from a car dealer and being involved in an accident before the registration application has been properly processed.

The possibility of several people being killed or seriously injured in such an accident is not entirely remote, yet the parent or guardian could under Section 46 be held wholly responsible for damages, whether or not negligence is proved.

It is of interest to persons who have minors in this possible category that at least one group of insurance companies has stepped in to provide parents or guardians with an interim policy that will cover minors who own their own cars.

But apart from that the law emphasizes the great responsibility taken on by the parent or guardian before he signs any application for a licence registration to a minor.

Litter Law

A TEN-DOLLAR FINE is in prospect for those who drop litter on Victoria's city streets, and if the bylaw for this purpose which the city solicitor has been instructed to prepare is well enforced by the police, it should have good effect—perhaps in more than one way.

The city council didn't go along with Alderman Robert Baird who suggested the time had come for the city to buy another street vacuum cleaner. Nor did it act on the suggestion of Mr. Courtney Haddock that (at the cost of overtime work) the mess of Friday and Saturday nights be cleared away for Sunday.

But if enough $10 fines are collected, the council ought not to find these items too hard to pay for. And if the police are at all observant, the fines will be rolling in—at least until litterers learn.

The Axe May Fall, of All Unlikely Places, On Necks of Redundant Civil Servants

SOMETHING is happening to job security in the federal civil service.

Just yesterday, "permanency," as they call it, was one of the most glittering attractions of a government job. Once on the staff you were there for life—no matter what—come war, depression, and of course those periodic "economy waves" so dear to the hearts of finance ministers.

Nobody was ever fired—come what may—it was just too much trouble to take it through the long and complicated process of civil service appeal boards.

It was always so much easier, if a civil servant wasn't wanted, even needed, just to forget about him.

He could get lost in the great army of—at last official count—precisely 338,928 on the federal government payroll.

It was as simple to vanish without trace into the ever-increasing ranks that one further civil service department public relations officer was able to spend the last productive years of his career before retirement secreted quietly behind locked doors in his office writing a book.

He was only one of hundreds—who knows, perhaps over the years, thousands—who disappeared, becoming one of the faceless and forgotten pieces of civil service flotsam, stranded on the lonely beach of some long-abandoned branch of a neglected departmental division years away from the mainstream of government operations.

But all that is suddenly—and for those caught up in it, frighteningly—changed and changing.

Prime Minister Trudeau and Finance Minister Benson, those hard-headed "pragmatists," as they call themselves, have taken charge.

And things are happening in the until-now great and always-growing federal establishment that haven't happened in more than 30 years.

Some civil servants—certainly hundreds of them—are being told they no longer are needed.

The last time within living memory Hill memory that such a revolutionary thing shook the customarily quiet and complacent capital was back in the early 1930s—the "dirty thirties" of the great depression—when the feared and hated Conservative prime minister, pompous, pious Richard Bedford Bennett, outright closed out the old department of the interior.

So many hundreds of civil servants joined the legions of the unemployed, old-time federal employees still pale at the haunting memory of it.

Since that black day so long ago, it has been forever onward and upward with the civil service in size of staff and belt of payroll.

But now, bright young sharpshooters, the dreaded "economizers," turned loose by Trudeau and Benson, are busy writing names to lengthening "redundancy" lists.

"Redundancy" is the polite term in the officialese of the bureaucracy for "unnecessary."

It means, bluntly, that if you're "redundant," your job is duplicated, triplicated with who-know-how-many-others doing the same unnecessary thing—and why don't you do the decent thing, make it easier for everybody, and go.

Some are being offered the choice of getting out or taking a pay cut. And there is even talk in high places of layoffs where job transfers just aren't possible for the "redundancies."

Only one hard figure so far has emerged—with 300 "redundant" in the amalgamation of the departments of industry, and trade and commerce.

Five new departments are being set up, through inter-departmental consolidations reaching into scores of federal agencies.

Treasury Board president Charles M. "Bud" Drury has shrugged it off with a "what's 300 in 200,000?"

But then Postmaster-General Eric Kierans has talked about 1,500 mail carriers losing their jobs in the possible cutting of Saturday deliveries. And the way he has made it sound, that's only the beginning in a tough tightening-up to put the post office on a paying basis.

There are 11 "task forces," as they're called, of efficiency experts from the treasury board at work, and 22 departmental deputy ministers have been warned of coming cuts in money and manpower.

Things may never be the same in this once safely secure and snug Land of the Afternoon.

"That Damnable, Deceitful Sex"

The Female of the Species Less Culpable Than Male

By CHARLES FOLEY

From Rome

THIEF in skirt robs pent-house flat. This newspaper headline was read out to make a point at a meeting of jurists, sociologists, and specialists in forensic medicine in Milan. Most of the audience supposed that it referred to the arrest of a man disguised in woman's clothes.

In fact, there was no evidence in the report to suggest that the "thief in skirt" who had been glimpsed briefly running away down a fire escape was not a woman. It was simply assumed that all burglars are men.

The instance was produced by Dr. Di Genaro, of Italy's ministry of justice, to illustrate a psychological blind spot which is almost universal. Even if the skirted thief did prove to be a woman there would be a tendency to regard her as an "honorary man."

This attitude accounted for many unpunished crimes, said Dr. Di Genaro. As one of the most experienced magistrates in Italy, he had known innumerable cases where the culprit escaped because she was a woman and witnesses always looked for a man to blame. Often, they found one. By the time he had cleared himself—if ever he did—it was too late.

Speakers at the congress came from several countries. Most agreed with Di Genaro's general thesis: women "get away with it." How else, it was asked, can one explain statistics that show men outnumbering women by 30 to one in Italian jails, and 25 to one in the prisons of Britain and France?

Perhaps women are simply more honest than men? The Milan conference was doubtful. Jail statistics cover only crimes actually punished. For inquiries, arrests, trials, figures are lacking and at signs of them a woman offender runs a better chance of getting off.

Even when they are found guilty, women benefit more readily from "extenuating circumstances," receive lower penalties, are released more promptly for "good conduct." They escape the "exemplary sentences" which are handed out to male criminals; judges do not rate them as "dangers to society."

Most of the experts agreed that the feminine character is no less aggressive than the male's; it simply finds outlets which the law does not cover. When lovely woman stoops to folly, man pays. Jurists declared many husbands or lovers suffered for crimes instigated by a woman. Her excessive demands may lead him to dishonesty, her amour propre to violence.

"That man has insulted me," she cries. "If you are a man you'll teach him a lesson." When her knight ends up in jail, she visits him in tears, and then goes home to make herself a cup of tea.

A man's pride tells him he can be offended only by another man, but when women are involved the mildest affronts impel him to strike back. Fights break out, and sometimes a contender is killed. This is particularly true in Italy, where drivers die on the roads not only in accidents themselves but after the crash, in hand to hand struggles by the roadside.

In one recent case it was established that the woman had urged her companion on from the car: "You're not going to let him say that, are you?" The ensuing fight ended when one of the men was stabbed to death with a screwdriver.

One heated delegate at the Milan meeting referred to "that damnable, deceitful sex" as he pointed out how clearly marked were the differences between the sexes in the field of crime. He produced a list of female prisoners from the last century alone which appeared to surpass any rival collection of males. His prize example was the famous Marie Besnard, who faced trial a decade ago in France. In five years she eliminated with arsenic a dozen relatives and two husbands.

A French magistrate replied that women run to extremes—they are either better or worse than men. He went on to quote Alexandre Dumas' policeman.

"There's a woman in every case; as soon as they bring me a report, I say: 'cherchez la femme.' That injunction was quoted around the world. Yet, if a man and a woman were seen running in different directions from the scene of a crime, everyone would chase the man.

An Italian described the special treatment given to "crimes of honor" under the Latin penal code. When the male relatives of a discarded girl took the law into their own hands, judges were often blamed for dealing too lightly with the guilty men. But so one complained when the girl herself received a nominal sentence after shooting her seducer.

The double standard works also for mundane offences like shoplifting. A woman is less likely to be arrested and, if a mother, she frequently escapes with a warning. Many big shops have given up prosecuting women for petty theft: it was more trouble than it was worth.

A Swiss sociologist reported, mentioning judges in some cantons who never sent a woman to prison.

Other civil offences are unforgotten. It was claimed, confirmed to men. A woman may quarrel with a neighbor, insult him in public, write him threatening letters, call at his office and accuse him before his staff, but prosecution rarely follows. Male relatives are invited to reason with her: it is understood that women are "emotional" than men, and their misbehavior therefore privileged.

The congress acknowledged that crimes of violence—armed robbery, assassination, assault—are a male monopoly. Gun-toting women are rare oddities: America's Calamity Jane was a child of her time, regarded as more man than woman by her generation.

Madame Blaise and her fictional ilk are far laughs. Blaise was a non-starter without Clyde.

The congress seemed to follow a popular Italian saying: "Woman is too good to be a criminal, but not good enough to be a good criminal." (The majority of conference delegates, of course, were men.)

Today in History

By The Canadian Press

First World War: Fifty years ago today—in 1918—German forces evacuated the St. Mihiel salient, closely pursued by French and American troops, at the bombardment of the railway junctions at Metz continued; British soldiers captured Meusem. The Allied offensive opened in the Balkans.

Second World War: Twenty-five years ago today—in 1943—German forces eased up on their Salerno counter-attacks and withdrew from the salient they drove into the Allied beachhead. Suburban London suffered its heaviest air raid in months; officials reported civilian air raid casualties in Britain for August totalled 168 killed or missing and 164 wounded.

The Gallant 'Few' Well Remembered

Mid-September, and again several significant 1940 "Battle of Britain" anniversary celebrations and ceremonies are being held in Canada and in the United Kingdom.

Memories can be short, and the most valiant deeds seem to lose their poignant touch as time bequeaths them to the detached judgment of historians and the public. But there can be no depreciation of Winston Churchill's memorable tribute to the Battle of Britain flyers:

"Never in the field of human conflict was so much owed by so many to so few."

When France fell during the summer of 1940, Britain stood alone and vulnerable. The invasion of England by German armies had been planned with the threatened destruction of Britain's Royal Air Force as the first step. Numerically, the German air force was then the most powerful in the world. But Hitler's Luftwaffe had underestimated the daring, the combat skill and untiring courage of RAF and RCAF pilots and effectiveness of their Hurricane and Spitfire aircraft, plus Britain's new radar warning system placed strategically along her coast.

Sunday, Sept. 15, 1940, marked Germany's greatest air effort, recalled as "Battle of Britain Day." In three great waves, 123 German bombers flew towards London, escorted by 679 fighter aircraft. Outnumbered, the RAF dived in among the enemy aircraft, destroying bomber formations. Many British and Canadian pilots had to quickly return their bullet-punctured machines to air bases for refuelling and more ammunition. Then quickly resumed battle action. Their small forces had resolutely wrought havoc among the enemy squadrons which were recalled with heavy, humiliating losses. It was later officially disclosed that the Germans lost three aircraft to every single RAF and RCAF loss.

Our Readers' Views

To be considered for publication in this or in past, letters must be on subjects of general interest, and if signed with pen-name, must be accompanied by writer's name and address. Preference will be given to those that are brief.

The RAF with RCAF assistance, had triumphed. The "Battle of Britain" was won. Hitler's army-invasion plans were postponed and finally relinquished. Hard-won victories and records of courage and endurance of Canadians who flew in the First World War as RFC - RNAS and RAF "air combat pioneers," and the air combatants of the RAF and RCAF in the Second World War, particularly those identified with the "Battle of Britain" victory, should serve as fine examples to those young Canadians who might be expected to meet any new flying challenges involving Canada's defence or security.

Roar, Mice, Roar!

Forestry Minister Ray Wilton's defence of the Bennett reservoir mess merits some comment.

His warnings that people should not venture on the lake for the first few years make good sense, though a pessimist might be excused for feeling that the first few hundred years might be closer to the mark.

What really jarred upon me was his use of the term "do-gooders" to describe those who wish to see this huge lake cleared of standing trees before flooding. This usage represents exactly the attitude in the higher echelons of government toward those who think recreational and wildlife needs should be considered along with those of commercial development.

Mr. Wilton is merely their honest and outspoken voice in this regard.

Power and commercial development are necessary and good in the province, but their planning should be integrated with that for conservation and the preservation of recreational potential. This is not being done; for example, B.C. Hydro is debarricaded by its statutory setup from spending money for such planning on the vast reservoirs it creates; it is required instead to remain completely commercial, a thing basically and absolutely wrong for an agency dealing with large scale alterations of the environment. Policy on such planning is instead provided by the Water Resources Service, a division that lifts its hands in holy horror at any mention of the excellent principle that no dam should be permitted unless its benefits are sufficient to provide for the cutting of all trees on the area it floods.

We need a basic change of thinking at the top, a fact further proven by the ruthless imposition of commercial needs and thinking in the planning of the Roberts Bank project. No dictatorship could have had less regard for the needs of conservation or the wishes of the public. And now the East Kootenay strip mining is to be planned by a committee of government and mining representatives—Big Brother Dictator extends no welcome to conservationists here either.

After that will come the flooding of the Mica reservoir, the clearing of which is now being planned by the same kind of thinkers.

A hundred years of thoughtless pollution and alteration of the environment has brought a general realization that corrections must be made, hence the current emphasis on pollution control. But we shall always lag in the field of conservation as long as those who demand it are regarded by government as mere "do-gooders," because this betrays an inability to see the need for it.

Only a loud and clear demand from the people will force a change of thinking at the top. So roar, mice, roar—the tune is yours to call.

Voice from 'Down Under'

I gather from letters from friends in Victoria that Sanich taxpayers are to be asked to vote on consolidation and possible extension of their sewers. I have also read a forthright and logical assessment of the situation by Dr. Marcus Bell.

I agree with Dr. Bell's conclusion that "only a fool would choose ocean disposal in these circumstances" but I am surprised that he emphasizes composting as the answer to sewage disposal problems.

Composting of sewage combined with evapotranspiration of the liquid waste is infinitely better than discharging waste to the sea in any form. However, like all mechanical treatment it is complicated and costly and there is no need for it at this stage in Sanich or Central Sanich.

Dr. Bell, I suspect, assumes that too many people in Greater Victoria have fallen into the trap of believing the propaganda about sewage in the ditches posing a serious and urgent health hazard. There is very little sewage in the ditches and what there is could be cleaned up very smartly if the necessary instructions were given. From my intimate knowledge of the health department I can state that this need not involve increase in staff—only change in policy.

Since leaving Victoria three months ago I have been travelling and observing almost constantly. I have also discussed disposal problems with many authorities. The places that are disposing of sewage satisfactorily without polluting their natural waters are doing it by upgraded septic tank practice.

This community which we have chosen as our new home (Mulgrave Shire, in North Queensland) has its own crews doing the septic tank installations. Cost to the property owner is very small—nothing is added to the general taxes and there is no maintenance cost. There is no sewage in the ditches and the beaches are fabulously clean. This area, incidentally, has a variety of soil conditions ranging from pure sand to heavy red and yellow clay and subterranean rock; the standard dwelling site is 6' by 13' although many are only half that size, and the annual rainfall (concentrated in three months) is 57 inches.

Dr. Bell made his point. There are better ways of getting rid of sewage than dumping it in the sea. The essence of his message was that Greater Victoria should take a good look at some of the alternatives. No person who recognizes the value of clean coastal waters would disagree with this.

What's in a Name?

In view of current interest in the fishmongers had to become bilingual, it may please your readers to know that, after 1000, the Norman-French stewards, from the Tower of London, bought fish in the Saxon market between the Tower and London Bridge—where the Monument now stands. The stewards and fishmongers had to become bilingual in order to understand each other. As a result of this, the fish market got the name Billingsgate. Later, the name became corrupted to Billingsgate.

Political Solutions in the Bag

Every election has its dark horse candidate. In this respect the upcoming Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands federal byelection is no exception.

But here, because no date has yet been set for the contest to fill the vacancy caused by the death of New Democrat Colin Cameron, there are several undeclared candidates.

At considerable expenditure of time and trouble, I recently arranged an interview with one of these dark horses. To preserve the secret of his identity the prospective candidate — you may believe this or not — went to the extraordinary lengths of wearing a paper bag over his head.

The eyes behind the slits cut in the grocery bag burned with a fearful intensity when I raised the issue of a bridge-causeway-tunnel between Vancouver Island and the mainland. This is a major plank in the platform of Tommy Douglas, national NDP leader who is attempting yet another political comeback in Nanaimo.

The voice that rumbled inside the confines of the brown paper was somewhat muffled but the message it carried was quite clear. Here was a man obviously aroused to the point where even the Churchillian phrases about fighting on the beaches and all that seemed inadequate.

A glass of water, with a little drop of something added, helped my subject take hold of himself and the interview began.

How did he like the prospect, as described by NDP provincial leader Robert Strachan, of being able to drive from Victoria to Vancouver in 30 minutes by freeway?

Horrible, he replied. Driving from Victoria is bad enough. But just imagine all those people from the mainland being able to take their Sunday afternoon drive over here. Mr. Strachan says the poor people on the Lower Mainland have no place to go for recreation.

What about we poor

CAPITAL REPORT

By IAN STREET

Islanders, he went on. Where do we go for recreation when Victoria (perhaps the thought) and Nanaimo becomes just another bedroom community for Vancouver? Mr. Strachan and Mr. Douglas can keep their dreams of the future megalopolis of Van-Vic or whatever they want to call it.

It can be argued, however, I pointed out, that Vancouver Island is a big chunk of land with plenty of room to provide recreation for everybody. And, of course, Mr. Strachan wants the Island to join what he calls the main stream of events in B.C.

Mainstream-schmainstream, he cried, obviously losing control again. If we're going to spend somewhere between $200,000,000 and $600,000,000 for a bridge between Vancouver Island and the mainland, why not a floating bridge across the Pacific so that the trucks carrying ore minerals can drive all the way to Japan?

That, after all, would enable Canada to join the main stream of Asian life.

So I told it to him, as they say in the new politics, like it is. Even Mr. Douglas doesn't really advocate spending hundreds of millions of dollars on a bridge to the mainland, at least not at this stage. He just wants a feasibility study of a project which would really amount to recognition on Ottawa's part of the existence of Western Canada.

I tried to calm the poor fellow, who had begun mumbling about finding a nice little piece of property in the Queen Charlottes, pausing only to express a fervent hope that Tommy Douglas one day wouldn't find it necessary to contest a byelection there.

He burst out again: Mr. Strachan wants all of us on the Island to be able to go to the opera and ballet. How many times would the NDP leader spend an evening in this way if Vancouver was only a 30-minute drive away? And wouldn't it be better to bring the arts to the Island?

There, I had it at last. There may not be a theatre now on the Island which can accommodate full-scale theatrical productions, but Victoria is building a convention centre which could...

But he was weeping uncontrollably now at the thought of thousands more tourists brought here to please the merchants and restaurateurs and make the rest of us unhappy.

So I told it to him, as they say in the new politics, like it is. Even Mr. Douglas doesn't really advocate spending hundreds of millions of dollars on a bridge to the mainland, at least not at this stage. He just wants a feasibility study of a project which would really amount to recognition on Ottawa's part of the existence of Western Canada.

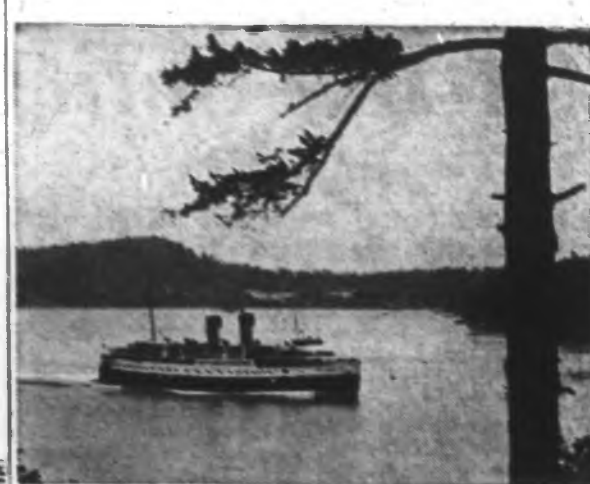

I tried to calm the poor fellow, who had begun mumbling about finding a nice little piece of property in the Queen Charlottes, pausing only to express a fervent hope that Tommy Douglas one day wouldn't find it necessary to contest a byelection there.

He burst out again: Mr. Strachan wants all of us on the Island to be able to go to the opera and ballet. How

Given a couple of hundred million dollars to spend, I daresay, there are other things like schools and hospitals and universities that Mr. Douglas would choose to spend it on before a bridge. And that convention centre — well, it will be talked, and talked about with little likely to happen in the immediate future.

I was ashamed of my own counter-productive thinking, but felt so good that I even tore up my paper bag and decided to leave politics to the politicians. They know how to talk about something without really getting down to action.

School Board to Decide Policy Tomorrow

Should They Be Strapped?

Like sex education, the subject of strapping children is practically impossible to debate without emotion creeping in. Perhaps a measure of human feeling is a good thing in this area but it's to be hoped that the thinking is as objective as possible tomorrow when the Greater Victoria School Board decides policy on strapping.

Last June trustees and senior officials of the administration held a private meeting with a group of parents who wanted to air various educational issues.

One of them was strapping, referred to by one parent as "brutality."

When use of the word was objected to, one parent countered:

"What would you call it when a child of five is strapped on the first day of school?"

In July, at an open board meeting, trustee John Porteous opened an emotional floodgate when he proposed that the board abolish corporal punishment throughout the school district.

Mr. Porteous, father of five, will admit that he whacks his children with his hand occasionally, as most parents do. But he told the July meeting:

"Strapping doesn't do the child any good, and there are other forms of punishment and counselling, particularly at the elementary level, which will help the child."

After a long and energetic debate which divided the trustees the matter was shelved for further study. Behind the scenes there was some opposition from the administration to airing the can of worms but the school board insisted.

Besides the record of strappings which every school must keep, trustees have been examining the philosophy of corporal punishment, studying policy in other places and receiving briefs.

Last week the trustees met groups of both elementary and high school principals. Not surprisingly, the principals weren't keen on abolishing the strap.

What does the Public Schools Act say about strapping? Here is section 3.05 of the Rules of the Council of Public Instruction:

"Every teacher shall practise such discipline as may be exercised by a kind, firm and judicious parent in his family, avoiding corporal punishment, except when it appears to him to be necessary, and then a record of the offence and the punishment shall be made in a register used for the purpose and kept in the principal's office, which record shall be open to inspection by the Superintendent of Education, the District Superintendent of Schools, and the Board of School Trustees."

Parents aren't eligible for a peek. The school board has been tabulating these documents: so far we don't know to what extent the public will be let in on the statistics.

The wording of the government regulation, of course, is open to wide variation. What is "a kind, firm, judicious parent?"

There are further rules prescribing just how strapping is to be carried out but they aren't public documents. It's part of the traditional don't-tell-the-public syndrome.

A year ago the Canadian Education Association made a nationwide survey of corporal punishment. Like B.C.'s law, that of most provinces is vague. The expression "kind, firm, judicious parent" pops up again and again.

Discipline is left up to local administrators in Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba. Ontario's law doesn't specifically mention corporal punishment.

The average teacher would probably admit strapping is essentially barbaric. Nevertheless, teachers tend to react with a defensive anger at the suggestion of abolishing the strap.

A LOOK AT LEARNING

By BILL STAVDAL

Summarized, their position is that they need the strap in reserve even if they never use it, as the ultimate weapon against the hard-core hell-raiser.

Others' more candidly, say the school would degenerate into chaos without the strap. This attitude says little for a teacher's ability to hold the interest of his class.

It's reflected in an anonymous two-page piece of doggerel currently being circulated in the school staff rooms. Written in the style of Albert and the Lion and aimed at John Porteous, it includes this verse:

"For the knight (Porteous) had forgotten the maxim, 'thou shalt order there's no learning at all. So now teachers 'ave nowt behind them. Nowt, that is, barring the wall.'"

Last winter the B.C. teacher magazine published an appeal by educator Dr. Selma Wassermann for abolition of the strap.

A Vancouver teacher replied with a challenge to Dr. Wassermann to abandon "the ivory tower of a faculty of education" and return to "the front line of the teaching profession" — the classroom. Put up or shut up, was his message.

He concluded:

"... Since education in B.C. is compulsory up to the age of fifteen, unless we are given the licence to expel immediately any behaviour or discipline problems, I prefer to retain the authority we have to impose sanctions, the final one being the strap."

Strapping is a nasty business and it's difficult to reconcile it with education. There's a ritualistic horror to it that most adults remember well (here's the emotion creeping in).

Somewhat a formal strapping seems an entirely different thing to a parent's quick, armoured whack.

And yet, how can any parent who has ever spanked a child condemn the teacher who straps as the only way he knows of deterring a wrongdoer?

There is no place for sadism in the schools but we can't expect sainthood of teachers.

One thing is obvious: when a parent or a teacher beats a child he is admitting publicly that he doesn't know how to persuade. Few of us really do.

However, it's incredible that in a time when strapping and strapping of adults has been practically done away with in the prisons, we continue to strap children.

Beating didn't reform criminals. Why is it expected to reform children?

At last June's meeting of parents with trustees and officials, the question was put:

"Does strapping serve any useful purpose?"

The question received no answer.

Smith Turncoat Moderate!

By HAROLD MORRISON
From London

Ian Smith, once considered the apocryphal of apartheid by his old buddies, has suddenly been cast in the role of a turncoat moderate by the white extremists in Rhodesia.

The near political blowup which has split Smith's Rhodesian Front party would appear at first glance to expose Smith to the danger of being toppled from his leadership perch.

Right-wing extremists, violently opposed to his gradual, transitional approach to apartheid, have strong links with South Africa.

But they show no evidence of overwhelming political popularity in Rhodesia where Smith has managed to hold power despite condemnation from Britain and the problems of coping with the continuing economic sanctions imposed by the United Nations following Smith's seizure of independence from the British.

In all probability Smith would be ready to agree with views of party rebels that the white man's position in Rhodesia must be secured for all time, but political realities demand that he must find some formula whereby minority white regime can command at least a remnant of world respect.

Under the newly-approved constitution, Smith has mapped out a plan whereby the black man would have a vote in two forms of black legislative bodies for the next five years, but after that, voting would be based on taxes paid and this would effectively rule out the low-income black man from voting power.

The five-year period of grace has been interpreted in British quarters as a holding action with Smith hoping that Prime Minister Wilson would be ousted from office in the next British general election in 1970 or 1971 and that a succeeding Conservative government would be more ready to fashion a compromise suitable to Smith's views.

But there are men on Smith's right who feel there is no need for shilly-shallying and that apartheid should be proclaimed once and for all, with Rhodesia turning itself into a republic linked up with South Africa.

The possibility that the impatience expressed by these men will spread in Rhodesia cannot be dismissed. Smith may be forced to move more to the right to mollify the extremists and this may in effect widen the gap between him and Wilson.

The minority whites need a leader and at the moment there appears to be no man on the scene who can command the power to topple Smith without causing even greater divisions and bruises among the harried and frustrated white population.

Communism In Middle Of Big Split

By WILLIAM RYAN

NEW YORK (AP)—Not for three decades has the Soviet Communist party been openly opposed on an important issue by so many Communists around the world.

It faces today its worst international crisis since Joseph Stalin signed a non-aggression pact with Adolf Hitler.

In some respects, the divisions provoked by the Soviet-led invasion of Czechoslovakia can represent a much deeper crisis, because the Nazi-Soviet pact could be explained away as a desperate measure necessary to buy time for the threatened vodka it would rather have rigid control over some countries than influence in many, he says, adding: "If the world Communist movement were used to this end, it would mean its death."

THAT END

He seems convinced that the intention indeed is to use it for that end. The Warsaw nations, he says, "already have consciously sacrificed the conference of Communist and workers' parties."

Sundie, a veteran of Moscow reporting, was referring to the Kremlin's projected international party meeting Nov. 25. Moscow has hinted it wants to go ahead with the meeting, but there are doubts it will.

The Italian Communists, making the rounds of Europe and conferring with other parties, are telling them that things cannot go on just as if Czechoslovakia never happened.

POLISH HINTS

Communist parties of the Warsaw Pact countries, according to indications from Poland, are in the position of haggling parties in the West to support Moscow's call for a November conference.

But the Western parties have been unable to sell their own members anything much in Czechoslovakia, except that it was a crude and deliberate violation of international law negating all the declarations of principles Moscow had signed since 1957.

The original Kremlin plan in setting the meeting date, well in advance of the Czechoslovak events, was to reassert Soviet domination over the movement and administer at least a rebuke to the Communist Chinese.

SOVIET ORBIT

Now Moscow needs a meeting for the purpose of explaining itself to leaders of parties outside the Soviet orbit, who can demonstrate that their own futures have been badly damaged by Moscow's great-power politics.

Up to the beginning of September, Moscow in its own press could report support for the invasion from only 10 of the world's Communist parties outside the Soviet orbit.

Of those 16, virtually all were parties whose membership is tiny.

Moscow showed in Czechoslovakia.

Czechs Must Obey Reds

PRAGUE (AP)—The symbol of Czechoslovakia's liberalization drive, Communist party chief Alexander Dubcek, told the nation Saturday night that it must give in quietly to Soviet demands for a return to Iron Curtain life. He said: "We must really avoid all excesses which could complicate and hinder our further development."

But he added, apparently for the benefit of the Kremlin, that to abandon the democratization program entirely "would mean the disintegration of the political unity in our society."

TONING DOWN

Doing this, he said, might cause "tragic encounters of social forces" which could nullify the Moscow agreement (by which the Czechoslovaks agreed to tone down their liberalization program) in exchange for an eventual withdrawal of the Warsaw Pact forces which invaded the country Aug. 20.

Dubcek appeared on television after new censorship regulations that include a ban on reports of casualties from the Soviet-led invasion was announced.

PARTY CHIEF

The party chief had been scheduled to speak two nights ago, but the address was suddenly cancelled. Informal sources said this was because Dubcek's tone was likely to have annoyed the Soviets.

Dubcek said "the basic question for us is the normalization and consolidation of conditions and the departure of the armies of the five countries from our republic."

"What are we to understand under the expression of normalization?" Dubcek asked. Answering his own question, he said normalization must include the full renovation of the economic, political and cultural life of Czechoslovakia.

IN JEOPARDY

Then he stressed "not to fulfill the provision of the Moscow protocol means to completely jeopardize also the post-January (liberalization) policy."

Dubcek said the party was determined to implement the Moscow record. "There is no telephony in this and we have no second thoughts," he said.

Dubcek said, "It must be accepted as a fact that some of the phenomena of our post-January development caused fear in the five Socialist countries and that these countries lost confidence in our policy, especially from the point of view that we have not ensured the removal of some of the negative tendencies which we had ourselves pointed out."

He said "we must therefore... really and without any ulterior motives and uncompromisingly remove from political and social life that which caused the lack of confidence."

But Dubcek made clear there would be no return to the Stalin-

Talks with Belgium

Romanians Reach For West, Again

BUCHAREST (LAT)—Romania demonstrated its new line of cautious but determined independence Saturday by opening a second round of contacts with the West, including a discussion of joint initiatives to seek peace in Palestine and Vietnam.

Romanian Foreign Minister Corneliu Manescu met with Belgian Foreign Minister Pierre Harmel for two hours Saturday morning. The talks will continue Monday when Harmel will meet with President Nicolae Ceausescu and Premier Ion Gheorghe Maurer.

JOINT APPROACH

Harmel said the conversations included the possibility of some joint Romanian-Belgian initiatives in the UN on the Middle East and Southeast Asia.

Romania has refused to go along with the Soviet Union and the other Communist states in all-out support for the Arab side of the dispute.

This Romanian Communist party developed in some detail Saturday the tightrope act it has adopted in the wake of Soviet invasion of Czechoslovakia. This was set forth in Scinteia, the party newspaper. Essentially the policy is this:

● Romania's foreign policy is centered on the fraternal friendship and co-operation with all countries regardless of their social system.

● Romania will seek détente by "unrelenting efforts for the development of relations with all countries regardless of their social system."

● The observance of each people's right to decide by themselves their fate offers the basis for the solution of any dispute.

Red Scientists Asked To Tour Space Unit

WASHINGTON (AP)—A state department spokesman said Saturday that Soviet scientists as well as those from other countries have been invited to collaborate on international meetings at Cape Kennedy Space Centre next month.

Whether the Russians will accept the invitation is not yet known, the spokesman added.

The Soviets have turned down similar invitations in the past—presumably because they did not want to open their space facilities to visits from American scientists.

While the United States has been canceling some U.S.-Soviet cultural exchanges as a gesture of U.S. disapproval of the Soviet invasion of Czechoslovakia, the spokesman said Washington has decided not to extend such invitations to international meetings and conferences.

Yugoslavia Prepared For West-Only Trade

BELGRADE (UPI)—A leading economist said Saturday Yugoslavia would be forced to trade entirely with the West if the Soviet bloc severs trade relations because President Tito condemned the Soviet-led invasion of Czechoslovakia.

Alexander Grlickov, government official in charge of Yugoslavia's relations with Comecon, the Communist version of the Common Market, said Yugoslav economists, however, did not think other Communist countries would cease doing business with Belgrade.

"Serious disturbances of the existing economic relations would not create only one-sided difficulties for us but for all our individual partners," Grlickov said.

Dubcek said "the basic question for us is the normalization and consolidation of conditions and the departure of the armies of the five countries from our republic."

"What are we to understand under the expression of normalization?" Dubcek asked. Answering his own question, he said normalization must include the full renovation of the economic, political and cultural life of Czechoslovakia.

Then he stressed "not to fulfill the provision of the Moscow protocol means to completely jeopardize also the post-January (liberalization) policy."

Dubcek said the party was determined to implement the Moscow record. "There is no telephony in this and we have no second thoughts," he said.

Navel Battle Laugh-In Victory

By WAYNE WARGA
Los Angeles Times

HOLLYWOOD — They have the most unenviable jobs in network television.

Hermione Traviesas and Sandy Cummings are the NBC program practices department editors — censors, to be more exact — assigned to Laugh-In, the cause celebre of last season which returns to the tube Monday night as proof positive that witty, topical comment can thrive in a medium heretofore content to glide glossily by.

And, it turns out, this first show rattled quite a few executive cages even before it got on the air.

First there was Richard Nixon arriving in beautiful downtown Burbank one day to say "Soak it to me!"

Cummings and Traviesas, assisted by the NBC legal men, had to manoeuvre their way around the equal time rule. The two men suggested say other presidential candidates waiting equal time be given a similar eight seconds on the air. NBC agreed. So far so good.

Then came the ceremonies for the unveiling of actress Barbara Eden's navel, a prospect that unnerved more than a few executive nerves.

A flap ensued and the two men, spending for the network, said we deal.

George Schlatter, Laugh-In's executive producer, submitted a new unveiling ceremony. Traviesas and Cummings were satisfied and told Schlatter they would try to get the scene in the show.

Traviesas

Cummings

provided it was not to become a running gag.

They lost, even though the entire executive staff had been told about the scene and no one objected at the time. The word came down via Robert Kaspare, NBC executive vice-president in charge of program practices in New York, NBC's high court of censorship.

Traviesas and Cummings went to Schlatter and his partner, Ed Friendly, and said: "They said the unveiling of Barbara's navel is definitely out."

"What do you mean, 'they say'?" Schlatter fired back. "Who's they?" This place is like joining the army. You never know who "they" are.

"We've got it pretty well narrowed down," he said later. "We figure the only person who could be shocked by seeing a navel must be someone who doesn't read newspapers, magazines, take showers or watch deodorant commercials on television."

What is unique in this controversy is that it involved the Laugh-In producers on one side and the NBC management on the other, with the two network censors lobbying for the producers.

And for allowing their censors — traditional company men at best — the latitude to fight, NBC, right or wrong in their final decision, must be congratulated. They're trying. As soon as a script is written, and after it has passed what Schlatter describes as "our own self-censoring readings," it is submitted to Cummings and Traviesas. They read it almost immediately and quickly get together for a conference.

Cummings, who attends nearly all of the show's taping sessions, marks the questionable pages in his script with paper clips, and notes his questions in red pencil. There were 12 paper clips in the first show's script. Traviesas, director of NBC's west coast standards and practices, then reads through Cummings' notations.

Next the discussion with Schlatter and Friendly. Both men usually wait until after the run-through of the show and a subsequent revised script before asking for changes. Schlatter often permits the insertion of questionable material so he can get his unorthodox cast in high gear. Much of it has been removed by the second writing.

A sample problem: In one small section of the show Jo Anne Worley, obviously pregnant, is standing at a drug counter. The drugist approaches and says: "Have you been taken care of, Miss?" Miss Worley looks surprised, then looks down at her maternal middle. The scene is over and the debate begins.

"She's pregnant and he calls her 'miss.' It would still be there if he called her 'ma'am'."

Schlatter, looking slightly chastened, agrees.

"What looks questionable in print may not be so when we hear it said. When Goldie Hawn speaks, they are words from the mouth of a complete innocent. Barbara Feldon, who is on the first show, is quite another case. Everything she says, including her own name, comes across as sexy. She is one girl we watch carefully," Traviesas says.

"This season they've introduced a new character who is a sexy sports announcer. We were worried about how it would. They've got an actor named Alan Sura who does it so well that he even throws a kiss at the end like Dinah Shore used to do. Once we saw it done it was obviously funny and not at all in bad taste."

During each show, one of the girls, tattooed from head to toe — appears in a bikini and begins dancing. Cummings, to the vast amusement of the rest of the cast, not only must approve the list of tattooed slogans, but he must also check to see where they are placed on her body.

One obvious quality of Laugh-In is that much of it appears to be spontaneous, and for this reason Cummings attends all of the tapings. Much of Laugh-In is indeed ad-lib, and often Cummings must pass or reject a comment on the spot.

"What's difficult," he says, "is when someone says something very funny that is quite unacceptable. I have to say no while I'm laughing and if I'm really on the ball I'll be able to think of a variation of the same joke that will make it acceptable. Not an easy job because there are 250 jokes on each show and all of them are on a different subject."

One section of the show he worries about most is the graffiti wall. He is concerned that the wall is tied and not cement, thus unmistakably a bathroom.

About three weeks after the show is shot and assembled, a roughly-edited cut is prepared. Traviesas and Cummings attend the screening along with the local programming executives and the show's producers and head writer.

After the screening of the first show, Traviesas and Cummings agreed virtually no changes would be required, causing Schlatter to shout, "Oh, my god. We must have done something wrong!"

Cummings remembers each show and keeps a watchful ear tuned to the news. A tragedy of a special sort might possibly turn some small remark on Laugh-In into a cruel comment.

"If that ever happens — and it nearly did during the Kennedy assassination — we quickly make a change. If the change isn't made, I can look forward to being handed my head on a platter Tuesday morning."

After the screening of the first show, Traviesas and Cummings agreed virtually no changes would be required, causing Schlatter to shout, "Oh, my god. We must have done something wrong!"

Cummings remembers each show and keeps a watchful ear tuned to the news. A tragedy of a special sort might possibly turn some small remark on Laugh-In into a cruel comment.

"If that ever happens — and it nearly did during the Kennedy assassination — we quickly make a change. If the change isn't made, I can look forward to being handed my head on a platter Tuesday morning."

What's difficult," he says, "is when someone says something very funny that is quite unacceptable. I have to say no while I'm laughing and if I'm really on the ball I'll be able to think of a variation of the same joke that will make it acceptable. Not an easy job because there are 250 jokes on each show and all of them are on a different subject."

One section of the show he worries about most is the graffiti wall. He is concerned that the wall is tied and not cement, thus unmistakably a bathroom.

About three weeks after the show is shot and assembled, a roughly-edited cut is prepared. Traviesas and Cummings attend the screening along with the local programming executives and the show's producers and head writer.

Victoria Theatre Talent Starring on All Fronts

Theatre companies from Pasadena to Halifax are being nourished by Victoria theatre talent.

The young dramatic style of Victoria, which began to bloom with the opening of the McPherson, now is putting up a product for export.

Backstage personnel and actors trained here are moving to find other jobs, more training, new stages to tread.

Paul Smith, who became a Bastion Theatre stage manager at 17, has just completed 10 months of theatre with the professional Neptune company in Halifax.

Paul was stage manager for A Taste of Honey, produced by Bastion at the McPherson, and he worked on many other local shows.

His family lives in Cordova Bay. Paul's sister Kyra is acting for Bastion now, playing a large role in the October production of Arthur Miller's The Crucible.

Leaving Nova Scotia, Paul will go to England, probably to take the next steps in his career. Glenn MacDonald, a young graduate from Manitoba Theatre Centre who came to Victoria to play The Artful Dodger in the musical Oliver, is in Buffalo, N.Y. He worked during the summer as stage manager for summer stock productions at Port Carling, Ont.

While in Victoria, Glenn was an actor, singer and designer in a number of Bastion shows.

His present title is assistant stage manager at Studio Arena Theatre in Buffalo.

Norm Dyson, Bastion's stage manager last year, is working as the professional technical director for London Little Theatre in Ontario.

Art Penson, who worked with university productions here and then was designer and actor with Bastion, worked with Pasadena Playhouse.

That company recently disbanded, and he now is studying commercial art in Nelson.

Stuart Baker, who is playing in and assisting on direction of The Crucible, also has a heavy schedule in Vancouver this season.

In the immediate future, he directs Inherit the Wind, the Scopes trial play, for Metro, then he will direct Offshore Island with Vancouver Little Theatre.

It is a mark of Victoria's energetic theatrical life that in addition to attracting talent, young people are able to take their training and succeed in other centres.

Rhett, Scarlett encore

Gone With The Wind

That Cuss Word Still In There

By BILL THOMAS

Gone With The Wind is coming back for the sixth time.

The first great film marathon opens Thursday at the Haida in a version that has been doctored considerably in the technical department.

The David O. Selznick film of Margaret Mitchell's novel first dampened handkerchiefs in Atlanta, Dec. 15, 1939, and as film critic Bob Thomas observed, "some exuberant Atlantans said it was the most important event since William Tecumseh Sherman had marched through in 1864."

Right from the start Gone With The Wind built up an impressive list of statistics. Miss Mitchell's book came out at the end of the Depression and she indicated she would be happy if her book sold 5,000 copies.

The 1,037-page book sold 50,000 in one day and eventually more than 5,500,000 were sold. She got $50,000 for the film rights and after it proved such a success the producer sent her an additional $50,000 as a gift. By contrast the musical version of Bernard Shaw's Pygmalion, My Fair Lady, sold for $5,500,000.

From the beginning filmgoers were convinced Clark Gable should star in the role of Rhett Butler but the search for Scarlett O'Hara went on for more than two years.

The film had started shooting, they were burning Atlanta at the time — when Myron Selznick introduced Vivien Leigh to his brother. Some Southerners protested the use of an English actress as the Southern belle but the choice was justified later when Miss Leigh won an Oscar for her role.

Another English star, Leslie Howard, had the role of Ashley Wilkes in the film.

Of the original stars, only Olivia de Havilland is still alive.

The best indication of how long this film has been around comes from the problems the producer had with the Hollywood censors.

There was a major battle before they would allow Gable to use his exit line as Rhett Butler. The censors were sticky about his saying "My dear, I don't give a damn." That's how old the film is.

Gone With The Wind is to be shown at the Haida for an indefinite run.

Proposed Convention Centre

Symphony Leader Urges Entertainment Facilities

Bill Thomas

ON MUSIC

Symphony conductor Laszlo Gati is worried the community could be shortchanged on the proposed convention centre deal.

He feels that before public money is spent on the project local citizens should be given some assurance that the building will be suitable for more than just meetings.

Mr. Gati shares the view that the building should be able to seat at least 2,500 people and have adequate entertainment facilities.

TOURING PRODUCTIONS

In his view, the new building should have a stage and fly loft suitable for major touring productions. The conductor says that the symphony and other arts groups would develop rapidly if they had a suitable building.

Why, he asks, should the people of Victoria put out $2,000,000 to satisfy one special interest group when there is this chance to build something that could offer something to the entire community?

The usual flat floor meeting room with a platform stage would not do the job.

The conductor's point is well made. People are being told, not asked, that they will donate public money to subsidize the CPR and one facet of local business.

SIDE BENEFITS

The people, in turn, have a right to expect something other than the intangible side benefits promised by interested parties.

There is no doubt that Victoria will never get another chance at a decent hall in the near future, so why not insist on one now?

The Community Arts Council might like to make it clear to men who hold secret meetings in back rooms that the people would like something for their GREAT HASTE?

The city fathers are usually maddeningly in haste to get cash to local causes, but they seem in great haste to give money to the hotel and transportation chain.

Perhaps it would cost more than the $2,000,000 estimated to give the city the kind of centre Mr. Gati visualizes, but it might be a lot easier to sell to people if they were convinced that they were getting something worthwhile.

The use of money from the McPherson estate might also be more readily justified if the building served some public, rather than special interest, use.

If ever the government sanctions Sunday films it will mean the end for the Victoria Symphony so there is no wonder that Mr. Gati is concerned.

A suitable building can be incorporated into the convention centre but it won't happen unless the people interested insist on it.

Drug Crusade Bucks U.S.-Ownership Tide

A one-man crusade is being undertaken in British Columbia to save the drug industry in Canada from becoming wholly foreign-owned.

The crusader is Russell Taylor, a diminutive but fiery Canadian who emigrated from Scotland only 10 years ago but now is filled with an intense feeling of nationalism for his new country.

Taylor is western zone manager for three associated drug companies in Toronto, who claim to be the largest independent Canadian-owned drug manufacturing group left in Canada.

VERY HARD
"It's hard to believe, but although my group is the biggest independent, I doubt if we have even 1 per cent of Canada's drug sales," he told me.

The group — Micro Chemicals, Gryphon Laboratories and Paul Maney Laboratories — hopes to have sales this year of $1,000,000, or less than one-seventeenth of those of another ex-Canadian drugmaker now wholly U.S.-owned.

"I feel it would be a great mistake, and a tragedy if Canada's once strong drug industry was to fall completely into foreign hands," said Taylor.

ALL DOCTORS
"That is why I am visiting all the doctors, hospitals and pharmacies in my area, seeking their sympathy and placing some of their business into the hands of a Canadian-owned company."

In the past few years several great Canadian drug houses have been sold to foreign interests. Charles E. Fruszt and Co. of Montreal is part of Merck and Co. of Rahway, N.J.; Elliott-Markon Co. of Montreal belongs to American Home Products of New York; Ayerst McKenna and Harrison Ltd. of Montreal has also been sold to American Home Products; Frank Horner of Montreal is part of Carter-Wallace of New York, and L. D. Craig of Toronto is wholly owned by Denoyer Chemical Manufacturing of Stamford, Conn.

GREAT FITY
These firms had built up a fine reputation for the Canadian drug industry, and Taylor thinks it was a great pity they allowed themselves to be absorbed into U.S. and other foreign companies.

John Cook, the president of the remaining independent Toronto group, says he is getting offers every day to sell out to U.S. companies.

"We sweep them off the step every morning," he says.

JUST AS GOOD
Taylor says he is conducting his crusade because he knows the Canadian-owned drug firms are capable of doing just as good a job as anyone, and he wants to convince doctors and other drug dispensers they can buy Canadian and still buy the best at cheaper prices.

"These Canadian-manufactured drugs are to be found in drugstores, pharmacies, and other outlets in British Columbia. I hope once the public gets to know about our fight against the great vested interests of the international drug industry, they will give us their support to enable us to exist and perhaps get a better share of the market," says Taylor.

INVESTMENT OUTLOOK
Increased interest in the industrial and commercial types of stocks has become No. 1 feature of Canadian stock exchange trading in the past two years.

The Toronto and Vancouver stock exchanges which in the past have been subsisting largely upon mining and oil stocks, many of an explorationist character, are gradually placing their hopes for expansion on the more sedate type of investor — the investor who places his money in dividend stocks that have some of the security of bonds, and some of the capital gains glamor of the speculative mining or oil stock.

EVERY DAY

Every day on the Toronto Stock Exchange there are more than 400 different industrial stocks traded with little more than 200 mining stocks. This is a sharp swing from a few years ago when the mining list was longer than the industrial one.

In Vancouver, where the mines and oils still predominate, the industrial list is also growing. In the first eight months of this year the value of industrial shares traded at Vancouver was more than $68,000,000. A year ago it was less than half at $33,000,000.

While the turnover in mining and oil stocks is still high and growing both in volume and dollar value, the investor is coming to the conclusion money can be made with much less risk in the revenue-producing type of companies.

The ending dollar has also contributed to the popularity of the income-producing equity.

CAPITAL GAIN

Not only does the equity provide the possibility of capital gain, which the average bond does not, but there is also the incentive of tax rebates which accrue to recipients of dividend payments that are not applicable to bond or debenture interest.

The market for industrial stocks has also been stabilized and widened by the operations of hundreds of mutual funds, most of which place the majority of their funds in this type of security.

REVOLUTION COMING

The revolution in the universities is quite likely to spread into business, according to U.S. experts who have been studying what is called the understanding gap between the establishment and the emerging generation.

What has happened in the universities is that administration has allowed itself to drift too far away from its student body, and lack of understanding has created a tide of resistance to authority which, though probably only temporary, has created much ill-feeling on all sides.

WIDE GAP

What is happening in the universities is spread into business, according to Robert Agnew in the University of Pittsburgh's Business School Review. Here, too, the gap is wide.

He says the younger generation entering the world of work will have different points of view than have been true of generations past.

He suggests they will not be charcoal-grey button-down collar and narrow-tie types to which business wants its bright young people to conform. On the other hand, the new crop may be closer to the customers and to the realities of tomorrow.

WORK FORCE

The establishment may hate it but Agnew says what it can do to preserve the status quo? "We cannot import our work force from Mars. Business must use what is available to it."

It will in the end have to change its techniques. So far as dress is concerned, Canadian business suffered a major defeat in its dark suit complex by the election of Pierre Trudeau as prime minister. Although not himself of the new generation, Trudeau has shown himself completely informal and a law unto himself in what he wears. His influence of young businessmen will be profound.

VIEWERS DIFFER

Whether this trend is good or bad, opinions will differ, but it is interesting to note that from Shakespeare's Polonius to the latest editor of the Toronto Star, there is agreement that "choice maketh man."

The old English establishment theory that, only by changing for dinner, even if he is the kine white man in the tropics, can man preserve his self-respect, may be outdated but it is not necessarily basically wrong.

OF FAR EAST, NEAR WEST

Old Wolf, in charge of Cummins's corporate planning and development, thinks we ought to reorientate our geography.

He believes that when we talk of Japan and East Asia we should not call it the "Far East." This is a relic of the time when time and distance were all measured from London.

Wolf wants Canada to think of the huge Asian market place as the "Near West," which it is as far as the West Coast of North America is concerned.

House Approves Biggest Bill

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The House overwhelmingly approved $72.2 billion in defence appropriations, the biggest money bill in history, although about $5 billion short of the administration's request.

The vote was 334 to 7. More than one-third would go for military operations in Vietnam and Southeast Asia.

Tour Set

WASHINGTON (Reuters) — Soviet scientists are scheduled to visit the Cape Kennedy space centre next month despite the Russian invasion of Czechoslovakia, state department officials said.

B.C. Firm Working On Outlaw's Mines

MEXICO CITY (UPI) — The Hudson Bay Mountain Silver Mining Co. of Vancouver, B.C., said Friday it would invest $1,000,000 to reopen 15 inactive gold and silver mines in Pinas, a ghost town in the central Mexican state of Zacatecas.

The mines, accounted for 80 per cent of Mexico's gold and silver output during the 19th century. In 1914, Pancho Villa and his armies of the north rode onto the scene and in the biggest shoot-out of the Mexican revolution captured the town, sealed off the mines and destroyed the plants.

Geologist James McCannell of the Canadian firm said his investigations indicated 40 ounces of silver to one ounce of gold in samples taken from the Conador mine and others in Pinas.

A Mexican-American company, the La Buzana Mining Co., was formed four years ago to interest foreign investors in developing the mines.

GEORGE T. RICHARDSON

The Governor and Committee of the Hudson's Bay Company announce that Mr. George T. Richardson, of Winnipeg, has been appointed a Director of the Company and a Member of the Canadian Committee of the Board.

Mr. Richardson is President of James Richardson & Sons Limited, and is also a Director and Vice President of The Great-West Life Assurance Company.

EMPLOYERS' COUNCIL OF BRITISH COLUMBIA

F. G. (Tony) PESKETT

The Board of Governors announces the appointment of Mr. F. G. (Tony) Peskett as President and Chief Executive Officer of the Employers' Council of British Columbia.

Mr. Peskett was educated in England and France and after service in the Royal Air Force came to Canada in 1947. His business experience in Canada includes association with several companies both in British Columbia and eastern Canada.

Before joining the Employers' Council, he was located in the Toronto head office of The Eaton Company as General Manager — Operating Services and a Director.

The Employers' Council of British Columbia, formerly known as the Commercial and Industrial Research Foundation, is supported by a wide variety of corporations and associations in the province of British Columbia. The Council was formed in 1952 to help develop, through liaison and research, a broader and better understanding of the role, objectives and responsibilities of business, both in the immediate community and in the sound development of the provincial economy as a whole.

New Pact Approved By Grain Handlers

PORT ARTHUR (CP)—Grain handlers whose strike held up shipments from the Lakehead for eight weeks voted Saturday nearly 90 per cent in favor of a new contract.

The contract provides a $1.05-an-hour wage boost for the 1,300 workers, whose pre-strike base rate was $2.30. The average wage was $2.50 an hour. The three-year contract was proposed late last week by negotiators in Ottawa.

Laurentide Asks Capital Change

VANCOUVER (CP)—M. L. Goeglein, president of Laurentide Financial Corporation Ltd., announced Friday the company plans to ask shareholders' approval for changes in the company's capital structure that he believes will help in marketing future debt issues.

Mr. Goeglein said in a statement that approval of the proposals would simplify Laurentide's capital structure and permit resumption of dividend payments at an earlier date than would otherwise be possible.

He said the proposals will be presented to shareholders at the company's annual meeting here Oct. 4.

Mr. Goeglein said the Vancouver-based finance company has made considerable progress in getting out of the financial woods.

NO DIVIDENDS

Because major losses wiped out the company's surplus and left it in a deficit position, Laurentide has been unable to pay dividends on any of its various classes of shares, said Mr. Goeglein.

The preferred share dividends are cumulative in each case and dividend arrears accumulated on these shares will total $4,011,000 at Sept. 30.

There are also arrearages in payment of sinking and purchase funds, of about $1,000,000.

"The company's total dividend, sinking fund and purchase fund requirements to service preferred shares outstanding amount to approximately $2,500,000 annually, which is substantial in relation to current earnings for the fiscal year just completed of $2,100,000," he said.

In consequence, a prime objective of the proposed capital changes is to reduce preferred share servicing required to a level more readily covered from the existing sources of business.

The essentials of the proposal are to eliminate the present $500,000 annual dividend requirement on subordinated preferred shares while paying out dividends on five other series of preferred.

Sinking and purchase fund requirements would be delayed until July 1, 1970, on three series and until July 1, 1975, on secondary preferred.

EXISTING SOURCES

The company's existing sources of business are to be maintained and the company is to be able to pay dividends on its various classes of shares, said Mr. Goeglein.

The preferred share dividends are cumulative in each case and dividend arrears accumulated on these shares will total $4,011,000 at Sept. 30.

Postponed Fair

Western Trade Czech Appeal

BRNO, Czechoslovakia (AP) — A plea for trade with the Western world—not just the Communists—marked the opening Saturday of the Brno International Trade Fair, postponed a week by the Soviet-led invasion of Czechoslovakia.

Czechoslovakia had been doing well in the last 18 months, said Foreign Trade Minister Václav Valec.

"This development was influenced by the known events in August of this year and the situation which was created," he said.

"Difficulties cannot be yet fully evaluated and there are bound to be delays in carrying out the ambitious plan of liberalization announced by the Czechoslovak Communist party early this year.

"But it is also certain that this program cannot be replaced by hopeless pessimism."

MANY CANCELLATIONS

Czechoslovak industry was set to make an extra splash at the Brno fair, which is celebrating its 10th anniversary. But the Soviet occupation set back production of almost everything for weeks.

The fair management said 1,463 firms and 31 countries applied to take part. There have been many cancellations but no official figure on them was available.

Official stands were ready before the opening ceremonies for Canada, the United States, Britain, West Germany and Brazil as well as for Communist countries.

Czechoslovak officials welcomed foreigners, especially Westerners, with great enthusiasm.

That Tight Little Island Loose Inside, Actually

By TONY OSMAN
London Sunday Times

LONDON—Dr. R. Lynn, an educational psychologist, has made a discovery which would begin to explain why Britain lags in economic growth.

He has found that the more anxiety-ridden nations are, economically the more successful. And the trouble with Britain is that it is not sufficiently neurotic.

Writing in the scientific journal Nature, he has plotted a graph linking economic growth rates with "national anxiety." (This is measured by a battery of psychological tests on samples from each of the major nations.)

It is broadly true that the fastest-growing nations are the more anxious—the correlation is more than 70 per cent.

The question is, which causes which? Does being anxious make a person economically successful, or is it the strain of being a success that causes anxiety? For Dr. Lynn, the answer is that anxiety leads to efficient working and hence to success.

His reason for believing this is based on measurements he had made on potential university students. In an experiment to predict how well students would do in examinations, Dr. Lynn found that the students who eventually did well ranked highly on a measurement of neurosis.

which is psychologically similar to anxiety.

Whether or not the students had done well in examinations before applying to the university, it was the more neurotic ones that did best once they were in. Their neurosis, it seemed, drove them to success.

Dr. Lynn believes, therefore, that something similar, happening on a national scale, accounts for economic growth.

The graph contains a few surprises. France, Japan and Germany are listed as the most anxious, and the United Kingdom and Ireland as the least, and this corresponds to the popular estimate.

But the recent violence and protests in America do not seem to go with the ranking as the third least anxious nation. The point is that the anxiety recorded is that of an average citizen, and the average American is presumably not very anxious.

Data Tells All

Pollution Fight Revolutionized

OTTAWA (CP) — A group of combustion experts here has come up with data which will quickly tell design engineers the cheapest design of an industrial smelter for any levels of pollution control.

At the same time, the group has drafted a standard for dust collectors and chimney heights which would keep pollution to a minimum in normal and abnormal weather conditions.

The standard was prepared for the Canadian Standards Association by a group headed by E. R. Mitchell, chief of the coming department's combustion research laboratory.

It will provide a scientifically-proven measure that the provinces can adopt in combatting air pollution.

Reaction from British and United States scientists who have studied the group's work is good, an encouraging sign since governments usually wait for such reaction before altering pollution control laws.

CHEMICALS HELP

Chemical additives help cut down some dust-borne pollution from coal and oil furnaces. But some particles and gases escape.

Experience in Britain has shown that the higher the chimney stack, the smaller the amount of dust and gas given off. But to cut pollutants to a minimum in some cases would require chimneys of impractical heights.

The group worked out a series of formulas for pollution levels under various weather conditions taking into account such variables as stack height, effectiveness of dust collectors, velocity and buoyancy of smoke plumes and wind velocities.

DUST STANDARDS

In reporting on their dust collector and chimney height standards, the group noted that many existing laws set pollution levels on the basis of normal atmospheric conditions.

But a weather change could push the pollution levels up to unacceptable levels.

For example, in an "atmospheric inversion" the air temperature is higher some distance from the ground than it is at ground level.

This pushes ground-level pollutants that would otherwise disperse to heights where the danger to man would be limited.

Tigers Stage Late Rally To Give McLain No. 30

Denny McLain won his 30th game Saturday as Detroit Tigers rallied with two runs in the last of the ninth inning for a 5-4 victory over the Oakland Athletics.

The victory made McLain the first 30-game winner in the major leagues for 34 years and cut Detroit's magic number for clinching the American League pennant to four.

Two home runs by Reggie Jackson, left McLain on the short end of a 4-3 score as the Tigers came to bat in the ninth, Al Kaline batted for McLain, who allowed six hits, and walked.

After Dick McAuliffe fouled out, Mickey Stanley singled to centre field and Kaline raced to third.

Then, with the infield drawn in, Jim Northrup bounced to first baseman Danny Cater. Kaline broke for the plate and Cater's high throw sailed over catcher Dave Duncan's head, allowing the tying run to score.

With the outfield drawn in, Willie Horton lifted a long drive that soared over the head of infielder Jim Gogger and Stanley scored the winning run.

McLain raced from the dugout with the rest of the Tigers to embrace Horton.

EARLY TROUBLE

McLain was rocked early by the A's but allowed only two hits over the last five innings and struck out 10.

Jackson's first homer — a two-run shot in the fourth — snapped a scoreless tie but the Tigers came right back to take the lead on Norm Cash's three-run homer in the bottom half of the inning.

Oakland tied the game in the fifth inning when Duncan walked, moved to second on a sacrifice and scored on Bert Campaneris' single.

Then Jackson, who had thrown a runner out at the plate in the third, tagged McLain for his second homer of the game and 28th of the season in the sixth inning, giving Oakland the lead it held until the ninth.

SEASON'S RECORD

McLain started his streak April 4 when he beat the White Sox at Chicago. He was 15-2 at the All-Star break had a winning streak of nine straight, stopped by Baltimore July 20.

The Orioles beat McLain twice. His other three losses were administered by New York, Cleveland and Chicago.

The Yankees extended their win streak to nine games and moved into a third-place tie with Boston Red Sox by dumping Washington Senators, 4-1, on Al Downing's six-hitter.

Roy White contributed a homer — his 17th — to make it 23 consecutive years New York has hit 100 or more home runs.

Minnesota Twins stopped Boston, 1-3, the Orioles downed Cleveland, 5-3, and California defeated Chicago in 10 innings, 5-4, in the other games.

CARDINALS WIN

In the National League, St. Louis Cardinals cut their magic number to two by blanking Houston Astros, 8-4, behind the eight-hit pitching of Nelson Briles, won 18-10.

TWO FOR MAYES

Willie Mayes hit two homers, bringing his lifetime total to 585, to help the second-place San Francisco Giants to a 9-1 victory over Cincinnati Reds.

In the other games, Philadelphia Phillies snapped Chicago Cubs' 11-game winning streak by blanking Atlanta Braves, 3-4, and Pittsburgh Pirates shutout New York Mets, 6-0.

Head coach Don Shula of Baltimore Colts says it is extremely doubtful that star quarterback John Unitas will start in today's game against San Francisco 49ers. Unitas tested his aching passing arm Friday but found the pain still there.

by knocking him out of bounds at the Houston five.

A final blow to the frustrated Miami offense was delivered by Glen Underwood when he recovered a fumble by the Dolphins' rookie fullback Larry Conzka at the Houston goal.

It was the worst night suffered by Griesse, sophomore star of the young Dolphins, since the last time he faced Houston.

In the final game of the 1967 season, during which he set an AFL record of 122 throws without an interception, the Oilers grabbed five of his passes.

VANCOUVER (CP) — Placement kicker Ted Gerales equalled his own Canadian Football League record of five field goals to help salvage a 22-22 tie for British Columbia.

Today's CFL game between Winnipeg and Saskatchewan can be seen on Channel 8 starting at 1 p.m.

Lions in an interlocking game against Ottawa Rough Riders Saturday night.

In addition to equalling the record he shares with teammate

Jackie Parker, Gerales kicked a 52-yard field goal, longest in the CFL this season.

He kicked the last one of the night, a 49-yard effort, with 74 seconds remaining in the game, attended by 25,352 fans.

Gerales converted Lions' only touchdown, the first earned by the offence in the last five games.

The touchdown was scored by fullback Jim Evensen in the first quarter on a 36-yard run.

Ottawa, still smarting from a midweek 25-20 loss to Edmonton Eskimos, trailed 10-0 in the first quarter and didn't get untracked until the second 15-minute session.

The Riders scored two touchdowns within five minutes, both two-yard plunges by Bo Scott. A 34-yard pass interference call on a Russ Jackson-to-Vic Washington-play led to the first one. The second was set up by a 45-yard pass to Walt Tucker.

PENALTY SETS STAGE
Rough Riders' other touchdown was scored by Washington on the last play of the third quarter. Riders had kicked a field goal on which Lions were charged with roughing. Instead of the three points, Ottawa was awarded a first down at the B.C. six. Jackson sent Washington around right end and over from the three-yard line.

Don Sutherland converted all three Ottawa touchdowns and

Kapp's Passing Bombs Falcons

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Minnesota turned two fumble recoveries inside the 20-yard line into touchdowns early in the second quarter, then stamped Atlanta 47-7 on the strong passing of Joe Kapp in the National Football League season opener Saturday night.

The point total achieved by 45,563 fans, was a regular-season record for the Vikings. Minnesota scored 45 points against San Francisco in 1963.

The Vikings, avenging losses to the Falcons in each of the past two seasons, owned only a 3-4 lead on Fred Cox' 43-yard field goal into a stiff wind in the first period. Atlanta then ran into a raft of misfortunes in the second quarter.

RECOVERIES HELP
Minnesota recovered fumbles at the Atlanta 15 and 17-yard lines to take a 17-0 lead. Then Kapp stripped away all Falcons hopes by completing 15 passes in 20 attempts for 191 yards and three scoring tosses.

Heading the Viking's supporting cast were Bill Brown, who scored three times and Clinton

Jones, who gained 101 yards on 18 carries, including a 43-yard run.

Minnesota's four-touchdown deluge in the second quarter for a 31-0 budge came after the Falcons had an apparent touchdown called back by an illegal procedure penalty.

by knocking him out of bounds at the Houston five.

A final blow to the frustrated Miami offense was delivered by Glen Underwood when he recovered a fumble by the Dolphins' rookie fullback Larry Conzka at the Houston goal.

It was the worst night suffered by Griesse, sophomore star of the young Dolphins, since the last time he faced Houston.

In the final game of the 1967 season, during which he set an AFL record of 122 throws without an interception, the Oilers grabbed five of his passes.

Norway Will Compete

From AP-Reuters

OSLO (CP) — Norway will compete after all in the Olympic Games in Mexico City Oct. 12-27.

The Norwegians withdrew last month in protest against the Warsaw pact invasion of Czechoslovakia.

The Norwegian Athletic Association rescinded the withdrawal Saturday after 16 hours of debate.

However, the association broke off all other sports relations with the invaders, the Soviet Union, Poland, Hungary, Bulgaria and East Germany.

Horton followed with his base hit and McLain had the victory. "I can't take too much more of this stuff," said veteran Eddie Mathews, thumping his fist against his heart. "Man, national television, 30 games ... everything."

ADMITTS PRESSURE
While that noise echoed through the dressing room, McLain finally admitted that he had been under pressure in the last three days.

"It's been on my mind the last couple of days," he said, although previously he had denied he had been giving it too much thought. "With all the business I was handling I really didn't have too much time to

TYING RUN
Dingo Segal, the Oakland relief pitcher, who had worked four scoreless innings, got Dick McAuliffe on a foul pop fly. But Mickey Stanley singled, sending Kaline to third.

Routine Miracle — Kaline

'Only One Bad Pitch'

DETROIT (AP) — The two-run ninth-inning rally which pulled Denny McLain's 30th victory out of the fire and gave the pennant-bound Detroit Tigers a 5-4 triumph over Oakland Athletics Saturday was just another routine miracle, according to Al Kaline.

"Just routine," said the veteran Tiger outfielder, whose walk ignited the rally that made McLain the first 30-game winner since Dixie Dean of the St. Louis Cardinals in 1934.

"There's been so many games like that this year it's become just routine."

EVERY DAY'S A THRILL
Willie Horton, whose fly ball to left carried over a pulled-in outfield to drive in the winning run, added: "I was just trying to hit the ball and run like hell. A thrill! Every day is a thrill in this game."

Two home runs by Oakland's Reggie Jackson left the Tigers behind 4-3 in the last of the ninth when Kaline, sent to bat for McLain by Detroit manager Mayo Smith, walked.

"I was just trying to get on base," said Kaline. "I knew we would have a chance with the top of the batting order coming up."

Battered Jimmy Ellis Keeps Crown

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP)—Jimmy Ellis, his nose broken and blood streaming down his face, scored a controversial 15-round Saturday night victory over Floyd Patterson in a World Boxing Association heavyweight championship fight.

Harold Valon of New York, the referee and sole judge, scored the fight nine rounds to six for the champion.

"Ellis landed the most punches and you have to score for the man who lands the punches," he said.

"Jimmy fought all three minutes of every round going after him. Floyd fought for less than one minute and you cannot win a fight just backing and covering up."

IT WAS CLOSE

"Still it was close. I had Patterson in the 13th and 14th, but in the last round Jimmy was so good it decided it."

The crowd disagreed, booed Patterson, and began a chant, "Patterson, Patterson, Patterson."

The Associated Press card had it for Patterson 7-4 with four rounds even.

Patterson had Ellis in trouble at least twice, in the fourth and sixth rounds. He staggered Ellis with two lefts in the fourth and followed with a left-right combination but couldn't put him away.

In the sixth, Floyd caught Ellis with a left, then drove him to the ropes with a two-handed flurry. Again, Ellis got away.

DOWN IN 14th

Ellis was down during a Patterson flurry in the 14th, pulling Floyd down on top of him. But the referee ruled it was a slip, not a knockdown.

Ellis came out with all he had in the final round, banging away with both hands.

The fight was decided on a round basis. Valon gave the first, third, fifth, sixth, seventh, ninth, 11th, 12th and 15th to Ellis.

Patterson was credited with the second, fourth, eighth, 10th, 13th and 14th.

The decision was highly unpopular and loudly booed by the crowd of about 30,000 who watched the open air bout in chilly, 50 degree weather.

The decision ran Ellis' record to 27-5 and was his 12th straight victory. He won the WBA title by defeating Leotis Martin, Oscar Bonavena and Jerry Out.

Quarry in an eight-man elimination bout.

Patterson's record now is 46-7-1. Patterson lost a disputed decision to Quarry in 12 rounds Oct. 26. Patterson twice held the world title. He first lost it to Ingemar Johansson of Sweden, regained it from the Swede, then was beaten by Sonny Liston on a first round knock-

Penalty Kick Rebound Pads Arsenal's Lead

LONDON (CP)—Defender Terry Neill had two shots at a penalty kick and stretched Arsenal's lead to two points at the English League in British soccer competition Saturday.

Goalkeeper John Farmer of Stoke City saved the penalty, but Neill moved in to score on the rebound, giving Arsenal a 1-0 victory on the waterlogged Highbury pitch here.

Arsenal, English League champion in 1953, now has 16 points from nine games in the First Division.

FIRST DEFEAT

Glasgow Celtic suffered its first defeat in Scottish League play since Jan. 27 when rival Rangers beat it 4-2. It was Glasgow's first victory over Celtic in three meetings.

Celtic lost in January when Dunfermline knocked it out of league cup play.

Back in the English League, Leeds, which forced a 1-1 tie at Leicester, was second in the First Division with 14 points from eight games. Chelsea and West Ham United shared third with 13 points.

BRILLIANT GOAL

West Ham was checked by Jimmy Greaves who grabbed an equalizer with five minutes to play to give Tottenham Hotspur a 2-2 tie. Greaves scored after a brilliant dribble by centre-half Mike England.

England World Cup stars Martin Peters and Geoff Hurst earlier had scored goals to give West Ham a 2-0 lead. Chelsea came roaring up to challenge the leaders with a devastating 4-0 away victory over Queen's Park Rangers, the newly promoted London team that has yet to win a match in the First Division.

TOO SKILFUL

Meanwhile, Manchester United, defender of the European Cup of Champions, suffered another defeat. Burnley edged it 1-0 with a sensational goal by wing-half Brian O'Neill, who dribbled from the halfway line and planted a 20-yard shot into the net with only two minutes to go.

Fashions Top Bill at Civic Playhouse

Two nights of fall fashions top the bill at the McPherson Playhouse Monday and Tuesday, Sept. 23 and 24, when Woodward's will display its latest for ladies under the title of Carousel of Fashions. Kinetic Club of Victoria is the sponsor on opening night and the Omicron chapter, Beta Sigma Phi, is responsible for the second showing. Woodward's Teen and Twenty Fashion Council will play a large part in the program and have designed the opening numbers around a circus theme.

Pre-show promotion found models at the sparkling new B.C. Heritage Centre where Daily Colonist photographer Bud Kinsman found a wealth of backdrop material to highlight the fashions.

One of the first three numbers is set on the circus ring theme and taking part, among others, on the left, are left and right, Margaret Larsen and Pat Prince in glowing capes, Lora Beth Trail as the Barker with the megaphone and little Carol Broadbent, who seems a bit overawed by all the splendor and splashing water of the museum entrance curtain.

Other backgrounds, like the bronze sunburst of Gordon Smith, top left, enhance the white crepe dress featuring a trumpet skirt and maribou ring worn by Linda Dickie and Maude Parker knit with a knack, the jacket striped in chocolate with a touch of cream.

Outside on the promenade, see below, is the Elza Mayhem bronze sculpture and two equally eye-catching outfits. Michelle Green wears a gold

Mr. Average Russian:

Czech Move Blunder

By A. H. MURPHY

The average Russian feels that his government blundered in Czechoslovakia; but he isn't saying much about it, says ex-ambassador Geoffrey Edgell, who recently returned after two weeks in the U.S.S.R.

"I think they feel, rightly or wrongly, that it was a power situation. They just couldn't afford a loss of face and they reacted in the only way they know how to react. They moved and, if you must know, I'm not sure that another nation wouldn't have adopted a similar course," Mr. Edgell said.

Emphasizing that he was trying to interpret the Russian course of action rather than what he felt himself, Mr. Edgell pointed out that Russia made no secret of her intentions.

"The president of the United States was fully aware of the intentions of the U.S.S.R. He was warned well in advance, and this is a fact that the Russian people are aware of. I think it is a fact that everyone should keep in mind," the former ambassador said.

Mr. Edgell went to Russia with Edward Goodman, president of J. E. Goodman Sales Ltd. of Toronto, to instruct Soviet state officials on the proper way to specify and bid for hydro equipment contracts.

He said Goodman Sales was representing Emergomach Export (Energy Machines Export) of Russia, a state enterprise which hoped to get a slice of the big machinery market in new Canadian hydro installations.

REVERSAL OF THINKING
"However," said Mr. Edgell, "I think that there is going to have to be a reversal of thinking in the Canadian business community about Russia."

They bought $28,000,000 in goods and services from us in 1967, as compared to our purchases of $22,000,000 from them. They don't consider this an equitable situation.

"And, furthermore, I think it is time we got rid of this bogey about the police state. I went everywhere I wanted to go in Moscow and elsewhere. I took my camera with me and photographed what I wanted to without restriction of any kind. There may be restrictions on liberty in Russia, but I certainly didn't meet them," Mr. Edgell said.

He did admit, however, that the women were "a bit dowdy compared with ours. They're a little on the heavy side and I guess they don't but the same stress on appearance—perhaps they have other, more important things to think about."

WARM AND SINCERE
The warmth and sincerity of the Russian people made a deep impression on the Canadian traveller.

"They just couldn't do enough to make you welcome in their country."

"I remember one evening in the 6,200-room Hotel Russia, the newest and largest in Moscow, when I asked the orchestra in the dining room to play some mood music from Doctor Zhivago. They declined but they did so gracefully," Mr. Edgell said.

QUICK MOVE
Regarding the regional district contracts, the mayor said the board directors were well aware of what was going on and they approved it.

"Occasionally government moves quickly and that is what happened. They approved the action and that was that."

"Mr. Campbell's inference is indicative of a man who is looking for a platform. He's starting to nail it together."

Saanich Roasted on Sewers

'Not a Single Question About Regional Contracts'

By DON GAIN

The brother of Saanich alderman William Campbell has criticized the municipal council for failing "to raise a single question" on the awarding by the regional board of $5,500,000 in contracts for the Greater Victoria sewerage project.

Gordon Campbell, unsuccessful candidate for the reeveship last December, has called for "facts and explanations."

"Mayor Hugh Curtis has offered an apology for not having the matter discussed in detail by the regional board, but as a taxpayer I am not interested in apologies," Mr. Campbell said Saturday.

STATE OF MIND
"It is basically this apparent state of mind of our aldermen which makes it impossible for me to support the Sept. 28 sewerage consolidation referendum," he added.

Mr. Campbell was referring to the award of contracts to three Victoria engineering firms to start work on the design of three major sections of the Greater Victoria sewer system.

Mayor Curtis, a chairman of the board, was quoted this morning as saying he would "quite willingly bend over the chair for this one."

ABOUT IT
Mr. Campbell objected to the fact that about 16 members of the board approved the three projects without discussion.

He said Saturday one alderman told him Mayor Curtis made the "fantastic statement" that if the aldermen did raise the question of the contracts at a council meeting, the mayor would rule him out of order.

Mayor Curtis strongly denied the allegation Saturday night. "I can only flatly and completely reject any suggestion that I would rule an alderman out of order if he asked about it," he said.

Mr. Campbell has urged that council delay all sewer extensions until this and other questions are answered. He called for clarification on the following:

• "The mayor and council were and apparently are still unanimous in the opinion that raw sewage can be safely dumped into the sea. Their attitude of mind clearly has been that treatment plants will be put in only if the health minister forces the issue."

• "Council claims that, unless sewers are extended, we will not get rid of our open, smelly ditches. Smelly ditches exist in many places throughout the whole sewer area. Those sewers did not rid us of such dangers. What we need more than extended sewers is a system of storm drains, the lack of which is clearly the cause, in most cases, of the would rule an alderman out of order if he asked about it."

Winged Medicos Answer for B.C.?

Look-up in the sky! It's a bird! It's a plane! It's Super-Doctor! The day may never come, of course, when people about this in the direction of B.C. skies.

But would you believe, maybe, just plain flying doctor? There are doctors today who do. And there are some who don't.

REMOTE AREAS
It's a picture that is shaping up this way:

The Flying Physicians Association, an American-based international organization, thinks it should expand to B.C. so that flying doctors could hurry to remote areas and quickly treat the sick and injured.

Dr. Gordon Hepworth, the vice-president, said in Vancouver there has been favorable response to his plan to introduce a B.C. branch.

INTEREST SHOWN
"I have received 15 replies to an advertisement placed in last month's issue of the B.C. Medical Journal and a number of personal calls expressing interest in the project," he said.

In Victoria, Dr. W. E. Newton, who owns "part of a Cessna 310," and flies for pleasure, said Friday night he didn't really favor the plan. He has not been approached in connection with the matter.

Dr. Newton is in favor of what he sees as a general trend in Saskatchewan and Australia—special arrangements for flying the patient out to the doctor instead of flying the doctor in to the patient.

This, he said, seemed more practical, since the doctor would have more necessary equipment at his disposal than he would if he flew to some of the remote parts of the province.

LAST YEAR
Dr. Newton has heard of the Flying Physicians Association, but knows little about them other than the fact that "they were here in Victoria on a trip last year."

Dr. Hepworth thinks a good service could be effected by using flying doctors on a rotation basis.

"Ultimately it could develop into a flying ambulance service. We could also set up an emergency mobilization program to get doctors into disaster areas quickly."

The project will be discussed further during a 1978 Vancouver convention of the Flying Physicians, he said.

Camping Dream Realized On Miracle Beach Shore

Bruce Colegrave, 2950 Millgrove, spent last winter building his own dream camping outfit and practically all of this summer living in it on the sandy shores of Miracle Beach Resort.

It is his own design of an A-frame, tee-pee-type camper-trailer-house which looks like the canvas tent-trailers, but has the advantages of solid construction camp cabin living.

His creation was the talk of the tourists this summer along Miracle Beach shore where scores of different outdoors outfits set up camp.

He got the idea when he saw tee-pee-type trailers at the Kwamis sportsmen's show in the Esquimalt arena. He liked the idea and set about to design his own camping outfit, using the tee-pee idea, but adapting the rest of the plans to his own special needs.

His brother Bert was interested and helped with the plans and also built an identical outfit in his basement.

Bruce spent his spare evenings from January until May building his trailer-A-frame and he had it ready for the first camping trip in May when they christened it at Little Qualicum Falls Park two weekends in a row.

It cost him $550 to build. It is made of frame construction with two "skins."

The inner frame is mahogany. Then comes two inches of fiberglass insulation, with 1/4-inch plywood on the outside. The roof is covered with fiberglass and plastic paint.

It is 14 feet long and six feet, four inches wide. When closed like a tent-trailer it is 34 inches high, but when opened like a tee-pee it is eight feet, three inches high at highest spot and has headroom in every place in use, even for a six-foot, two-inch man like Mr. Colegrave. It features two double beds, each 5 1/2 feet wide, and in the daytime they close down to chesterfield and table setup.

The stove is a two-burner primus propane cooker and there is a sink, four large cupboards, and plenty of storage space.

The two roof gables fold down to fit into each other to make a compact trailer, easy to tow, and quite suitable for carrying a boat on top of the trailer.

"This is the answer. It is so easy to tow and so comfortable for camping," says Mr. Colegrave who had been looking for a house trailer before he hit upon his A-frame idea.

Said wife Margaret, "We spent six weeks at Miracle Beach this year. When it rained it didn't bother us a bit because we were snug in our little cabin."

Who Pays Grain Benefits?

Most agricultural officials welcome the end to the Lakehead grain handlers strike, but they express concern about how grain-handling firms would pay for increased benefits.

There were conflicting views of what the terminal elevators should do to raise the additional monies required to meet the proposed settlement for 1,300 workers — $1.05 an hour over the life of a three-year contract.

F. F. Hamilton, chief of the Board of Grain Commissioners, suggested the elevator companies should absorb increased costs.

A. M. Runiman, president of United Grain Growers, said the "very generous" settlement offer probably would be followed by the companies' request for increased grain handling charges to be passed on to farmer.

Premier Ross Thatcher says Saskatchewan doesn't want to turn over "one more inch" of land to the federal government for the creation of Indian reserves.

He said in Regina his government is "absolutely opposed" to expanding reserves and believes that integration, not segregation, offers the best hope for improving the Indians' lot.

The 25-mile Alberta Resources Railway will be finished on schedule in December.

The resources line will join the CNR main line at Selkirk, 190 miles west of Edmonton, to Grande Prairie, 228 miles northwest of Edmonton.

Dr. Howard Nixon of the University of Saskatchewan has told the province's task force on opportunities for Indians and Métis that a tour of northern areas had convinced him that welfare payments wouldn't solve native peoples' problems.

"Welfare dollars have not done anything for isolated communities, except to perpetuate disaster," said the dean of physical education at the University of Saskatchewan campus.

Dr. Nixon, chairman of the task force's education committee, spent several days in the far northern communities of La Loche, Turner Lake and Buffalo Narrows.

Bob Douglas, 65, of Edmonton, a school teacher, will seek the leadership of the Alberta New Democratic Party.

The president of the Saskatchewan Hotels Association says a form of discrimination has ended with the ruling that drinkers no longer have to leave all the province's beer parlors and beverage rooms each night at supper time.

Jack Freestone of Regina said that the ruling simply extends to patrons of beer parlors and beverage rooms the same drinking privileges that have been enjoyed by patrons of cocktail bars, which didn't have to close for supper.

Nearly 60 per cent of Manitoba's vegetable crop has been destroyed by heavy late summer rains, the Manitoba Vegetable Marketing Commission reports. And, said manager Bill Daman, "a frost anytime will kill what crops the farmers have left."

Canadian wheat exports showed further decline for the week ended Sept. 4, but the total so far this year remains higher than for the same period last year.

CNR Repairs Mail Line

VANCOUVER (CP) — Service was restored to normal on Canadian National Railway's main line at Langley following derailment of the CNR's super-container.

Brilliant Show Checkmates Canadian Open

By RAY KERR

Chess players, like other people, sometimes do funny things. But judge for yourself.

Late last month, the U.S. held its annual open championship in Snowmass, Colo., attracting a number of its own grandmasters and a guest.

The guest just happened to be Denmark's great chess whiz, Bent Larsen. He ran away with the title, the trophy and $1,250 in cash by scoring 11 wins and two draws in the 13-round tourney.

Well behind with 9 1/2 points each came U.S. grandmasters Pal Benko and Walter Browne.

CANADIAN MEET

After this, things got interesting. Shortly following the U.S. championship, Canada had its own open tournament, which seems to take place whenever there are enough funds and sponsors.

During advance publicity for the Toronto event, the tournament publicists said it'll include such grandmasters as "Larsen, Benko, Browne, and several others of the same calibre from the U.S."

LARSEN ONLY

But came Canadian Open time, and the only grandmaster on the scene was Larsen, considered among the top five in the world.

With no competition from grandmasters, he simply hid from the rest of the field with a 10 1/2-1/2 score, making it a farce rather than a fight for Canadian title.

The question all North American chess players are asking now is what happened to all U.S. grandmasters who were supposed to show up in Toronto.

ALL MISSING

Is it possible Larsen's performance in the U.S. Open convinced the North American grandmasters there was no use going to Toronto with a player of Larsen's calibre there?

If so, North American tournaments might have to be closed to overseas players of world calibre.

And then the world "open" will really have no meaning at all.

NORTHWEST SCENE

Meanwhile, on the Pacific Northwest chess scene, a tournament of interest to Island players is the Peace Arch Open in Bellingham, Oct. 5 and 6.

The tournament, which usually attracts a fair number of B.C. entries, will be played in the Senior Activity Centre, 314 East Holly.

Registration is from 8:30 to 9:30 a.m., Oct. 5.

... trained, dedicated personnel supported by complete facilities ... It's wise to choose McCall's.

Garden Notes

By M. V. CHESNUT

CLEMATIS—FLOWERED IRIS — (E.G., Victoria). Iris kaempferi, the clematis-flowered iris of Japan, is best planted in October and comes into bloom about the time the ordinary flag or bearded iris is finishing.

It grows best in a sunny position, preferably by the side of a garden pool, and needs an abundance of soil moisture during the growing season, with somewhat drier conditions in winter.

The plant is a lime-hater, preferring a rich loamy soil with a liberal dressing of very old cow manure in June. It is best not to cut down the foliage in the fall but allow it to remain and decay, pulling it away in the spring.

Some good varieties are Dresden China, silvery lilac and lavender; Blue Lagoon, clear deep sky blue; Purple East, a rich purple and growing very tall, up to four feet; Lady in Waiting, double white with a pink and lavender edging; Tiger Dance, double blooms of sky blue with purple-red veins; World's Delight, orchid pink, and Nina, double blooms in pale pink on a silver ground. Prices run around $3 to $2.50 each.

AMARYLLIS CULTURE — (J.M.,

Nanaimo). In the older varieties, amaryllis plants which have been summering outdoors will start to die down around the end of September, indicating the approach of the resting period.

When this occurs, "wean" the plant by gradually withholding water until the foliage is quite yellow and limp. Then cut away the topgrowth and store the bulb in its pot of soil — in the basement at a temperature of 50 to 55 degrees.

New growth should appear in January, and when this is noticed, scrape away an inch or two of surface soil in the pot and topdress with manure-enriched loam. Repotting is needed only about every third year.

Some of the modern African hybrids appear to be almost evergreen, with no well-defined resting period. If no yellow appears in the leaf tips by the end of September, bring the plant indoors to a sunny window and continue normal watering. Never dry off an amaryllis until the plant gives a clear indication that it wants a rest.

SICK WALLFLOWERS — (C.M.C., Victoria). The wallflower seedlings you sent me had been attacked at the root by the larvae of the cabbage root fly.

This pest will often infest the remnants of members of the crucifer family such as wallflowers and stocks as well as cabbage, sprouts and cauliflower.

It is a difficult pest to control once it has a good foothold. I think your best bet would be to drench the soil around the roots with diazinon, two tablespoonfuls per gallon of water and about one cupful per plant, applied when the soil is already moist to a good depth.

PEACHES FROM STONES — (L.U., Duncan). The peach is about the only tree fruit that can be grown from seed with any expectation of getting good quality fruit in a reasonable time. It isn't necessary to crack the stone — simply plant out now on a nursery bed or a coldframe.

Seedlings should appear next spring and may be transplanted to their permanent positions in a year's time. Fruiting will usually commence in five or six years, as compared to as much as 15 years for a seedling apple.

Western varieties of peaches are self-fertile and don't require a "husband." Some Ontario varieties must have a peach of a different variety growing nearby to provide pollen for the blossoms.

ART BUCHWALD Interviews Shacainery

Crowd Counting a Science

WASHINGTON — Now that the presidential election campaign is off and running, we are starting to get our first reports on crowd estimates. Estimating the size of crowds that come out for a presidential candidate is one of the most exacting sciences there is, and can have a tremendous psychological effect on the outcome of the election.

I talked to Selwyn Shacainery, the best known crowd estimator in the country the other day. He said, "Crowd-wise, the 1968 presidential campaign should be as interesting as any in American history."

"Why is that?" I asked him. "You've got added factors this year that you haven't had before. In the past you assumed that most of the people who turned out for a presidential candidate were for him. But this year you may have more people turn out to demonstrate against the candidate than to hear what he has to say."

"Will you include the demonstrators as part of the crowd estimation?"

"You have to. A crowd's a crowd and I'm not concerned with what their reasons are for being there. My job is to estimate the numbers and if I can come within an accurate figure, give or take 100,000, then I've done my job."

"Is there that much leeway in crowd estimating?"

"That's not a lot when you've got an election at stake. Before the age of the professional crowd estimator, the news media were dependent on crowd figures given out by the police. In a Democratic city, a Republican was always shortchanged, and in a Republican city the Democratic candidate was given a bad count."

"But now, thanks to the science of crowd counting, it's impossible for any hanky panky to take place. Each candidate hires his own crowd estimator and the figures are official."

"But if you're paid by a presidential candidate aren't your totals suspect?"

"Absolutely not. All licensed crowd estimators take an oath that they will tell the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, so help them God. Our ethical standards are very high and if we find anyone overestimating a crowd he can be demoted."

"How do you go about estimating a crowd during a presidential campaign?"

"First you check the route the candidate is going to take. Then you multiply the width of the sidewalk by length and you figure how many bodies this will hold."

"You add this to the square of the plaza where the candidate is scheduled to speak, and then you add 10 per cent to whatever figure the opposing presidential candidate claimed he pulled in that city. Once you get the total you immediately give it out to the press."

"You really have to be an expert," I said in amazement.

"It's very specialized," Shacainery admitted. "Most presidential candidates like to go through a city at lunch hour, and this complicates the count because you really can't count people who are going to lunch as part of the crowd, can you?"

"Well that's how wrong you are," he said. "If anyone chooses to go to lunch when the candidate is in town, he gets counted whether he likes it or not."

"Then if you're a Republican and Humphrey comes to town the best thing to do is to keep off the streets until he leaves."

"That's true. And if you're for Humphrey and Nixon comes to town, I wouldn't even look out the window."

'Good Friends' to Fight?

HOLLYWOOD (NANA) — Britt Ekland's statement that "Peter and I are good friends" goes up in smoke with the news that Peter Sellers will fight his divorce action. However, Peter is a charming man and doesn't seem surprised if he reverses himself before the case comes into court.

Can you believe that Rita Hayworth will hit 50 next month? She looks in better shape than some of her contemporaries... and what about the old-time glamour movie star who is stoned at every function she attends? ... Incidentally, Gabe Storm, one of television's earliest girl-next-door images, is now a grandmother via her son, Peter Russell. ... And with Dianne Warwick's baby due in January, she is working around the clock in The Slave, to beat the visible deadline.

Dustin Hoffman was saying that if he were sure of reincarnation, the next time around he would like to have lots of children. I don't quite see the connection. He is not yet married, or is he?

Is this nepotism? At Gallaghers, director Larry Poreco disclosed that he signed his Uncle Mac and his father Jan for important parts in Goodbye Columbus.

John Sturgis is screening his Ice Station Zebra for Warren Beatty in hopes he will break his film's absence of the past year and star for him in Yards of Essendorf, a Second World War suspense story. It will have to be good to be as good as Sturgis's The Great Escape, which made a star of Steve McQueen.

Three more years and Jane Russell's $1,000-a-week stipend from Howard Hughes will be all over. Her last deal with the recluse, who made her a star 30 years ago in The Outlaw, was spread over 20 years as it should be for actors, authors and athletes and others who may have a huge income one year and not too much afterwards... Incidentally, Jane invited Hughes to her recent wedding with actor Robert Barrett but, as expected, he did not show.

Now that Peter Fonda is a producer, he may have a role for his old man Henry, in an upcoming picture. If the senior Fonda plays his cards right, that is. You will soon see Henry as the lawyer in The Boston Strangler.

Friday the 13th marked the fifth wedding anniversary for Barbara Streisand and Elliott Gould. They had some rocky moments over her friendship with Omar Sharif during the making of Funny Girl which debuts on the 18th in New York. But as of now they are holding firm and are expected to attend the premiere together.

J. Lee Thompson, now directing Gregory Peck in The Chairman, has bought a story by an English writer titled, You. It is a fictionalized account of the assassinations of the Kennedy brothers.

What Age to Marry?

SYDNEY HARRIS

Wisdom consists not so much in knowing the right answers, as in knowing the right questions to ask. If we persist in asking poorly framed questions, we can never arrive at satisfactory answers.

At dinner last night, for example, a woman asked me if I thought that "18 is too young to marry." This is a question nobody can answer, but almost everybody tries, and fails.

It is not a proper question, because marriage is a matter of emotional maturity, not chronological age. Some young people at 18 are as mature as they will ever be; others are still adolescent at 40.

Mind you, I am not speaking here of the economic problems involved in early marriages. Obviously, these must be considered on their own. And, just as obviously, if two young people are emotionally mature they will not undertake a marriage before they are ready and able to support themselves and a family.

I have seen farm girls of 16 who were as mature as they ever will be, and would make admirable wives. And I have seen sophisticated city women twice their age who, despite their charm and worldliness lacked the responsibility and give-and-take a good marriage calls for.

The age, in terms of years, means little. And so, surprisingly enough, does the intelligence. One reason that very bright people so often make bad early marriages is that they confuse their mental development with their emotional growth.

There is, alas, not much relationship between the brains and the feelings. An intellectual titan can, and often does, have the emotional equipment of a toddler — but because he understands the world, he thinks he also understands himself, and is thus betrayed into a hasty and ill-considered marriage.

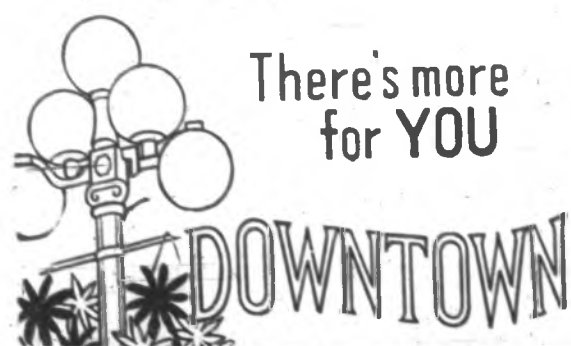

I would say that people are emotionally too young to marry (whatever their age) when they marry for negative reasons: to get away from an unhappy home, or because they are lonely, or because of an excessive need to be dependent, or because they are afraid of growing old and unwanted.

Despite the bulky books of social studies, marriage remains a dark and complex subject that nobody knows very much about.

But we do know enough to realize that the actual age of a person has little to do with his ability to maintain a generous and realistic relationship with another person over a long period. At 18, or 40, or 80, some never acquire this gift.

Four Injured in Crash

Rescuer Cradles Hurt Boy

Three adults and a baby were taken to Victoria hospitals as a result of a head-on collision about 9 p.m. Saturday at Wascana and the Trans-Canada Highway.

In fair condition with head and chest injuries at St. Joseph's Hospital is Lloyd Plaxton of Cobble Hill. His wife Chole is also in fair condition with leg injuries, and his two-year-old son John is in satisfactory condition with undetermined head injuries.

Saanich police identified the driver of the other car involved as Nidrang Solunac, 1151 Rockland. He is in satisfactory condition in Royal Jubilee Hospital with head injuries. Mr. Solunac was the lone occupant in his car.

"It sounds like three separate crashes. I rushed out after the second and saw the Plaxton car sliding backward off the road," said Mrs. Rignor Frederiksen who was visiting friends nearby. She said she saw Mr. Plaxton thrown from the car and hurried back to get blankets.

"When I got to the car I saw the mother holding her baby in her arms. She was pinned inside the car so I took the baby and wrapped it in a blanket."

Mrs. Frederiksen said while rescuers worked with torches to free the mother, police picked up the two drivers and she cradled the baby in her arms to the hospital.

Another neighbor described the noise of the crash as "sounding as if someone slammed a door hard."

Traffic was backed up to Douglas on one side and Tillicum on the other by the accident.

Accidents Arrive With Rain

Greater Victoria police attended approximately 30 traffic accidents during Saturday afternoon's heavy rainfall.

Injuries were few and none was reported serious, according to police.

While the rain was blamed in nearly every case, RCMP at Colwood said a deer was the cause of one of the day's more spectacular accidents.

A car driven by David Amund of Courtenay spun out of control when Mr. Amund swerved to miss a deer on the Malahat, near Tunnel Hill, at 1 p.m., police said.

CAR FLIPS

The car left the road and flipped over backward.

Two teenage girl passengers were taken to St. Joseph's Hospital with minor injuries and were later released. The driver was not hurt.

This was the second almost identical accident reported by Colwood police in three days. Thursday, a large truck ran into a small panel truck about 9:30 p.m. near the Malahat Chute.

The truck rolled over, causing heavy damage. The driver was not injured, but the deer died.

CUT EAR

Another Malahat accident at 12:45 p.m. Saturday sent Ernest Massick, 62, of Cobble Hill, to St. Joseph's Hospital. He was admitted with a badly cut ear after his car struck the guardrails on both sides of the highway, a quarter of a mile south of the Dutch Latch.

Mrs. Helen Barkanyi, 1518 Island Highway, driver of one of three cars involved in a collision at Highway 1A and Belmont, was treated for minor injuries at St. Joseph's Hospital and released.

Russian Tug In Clear

Naval authorities in Esquimalt investigated the sighting Saturday of a Russian tug near the Queen Charlotte Islands, but reported afterward all was in order.

The navy said the tug had the "necessary clearance" from Canadian authorities to enter the area, and was performing a service for Russian fishing vessels. The tug was reported by an unidentified Canadian fishing boat.

Seen In Passing

Dave Duncan working hard in his gas station. ... Ben Douglas glad that school has started. ... Rick McVie describing the fish that got away. ... Fern (chubbish serving customers on a crossword puzzle. ... John Abbott giving advice on the stock market. ... Lynda Allen seeing her husband off to Philadelphia. ... Janice Fugh trying to understand French. ... Al Dawson practising Spanish. ... George Crevlin relaxing in the park. ... Doug Spurgeon talking about his new camper.

Few Places to Stay

Varsity Couples Feel Pinch

By SUE MAYSE

About 50 married students, some of them with children do not expect to find accommodation by the time university starts.

Although housing has been scanty for all students in Victoria this year, the real pinch is in places for couples to live while they study, according to Mrs. Dianna Caley, co-ordinator of women's activities at the university.

It is much more difficult for a couple to find an apartment or rooms than it is for unmarried people, she said.

"Two or three girls can get an apartment for $120, and it's only costing them $60 or $40 each. But a couple has to try to live for the price of one, almost, and it's very hard to do."

"Very often the girl is taking courses, too, and some of the couples have children," she said.

"They all have quite a small budget, and their grants are never large. Usually they have to take teaching assistantships to help out, or make papers — something like that."

What the married student needs in an apartment, she said, is first of all, a place that costs less than $100 a month.

"They need at least two rooms, one for preparing food and one sleeping-living area. And they really need a private bathroom."

Places of this description, she said, are few.

"On the university housing lists, there have been only two or three people willing to take couples."

Apartment house rates are usually too high for a student couple, she added, and the apartments near to the campus have long waiting lists.

However, the housing situation for single out-of-town students, which promised to be bad earlier in the summer, isn't as drastic as it's been painted, according to Mrs. Caley.

"I think any girl coming to the university would find it quite easy to get a place to stay."

"For boys it's a bit harder, she said, because most of the people offering accommodation on the university housing lists ask for girl boarders. People think they're neater, eat less, and are more independent, she said.

"But many of the boys looking for accommodation have been going to the places that ask for girls, and have been accepted anyway."

In the university's own residences, 306 men and women students will be accommodated this year, and when six new residence buildings are completed next year they will take another 300.

North Ward 'Unsafe' in 1896

No Moist Eyes as Board Ready to Let School Go

By BILL STAVDAL

After 74 years of use, North Ward elementary school is about to be formally abandoned.

The Greater Victoria school board is expected to approve a recommendation Monday that the school be officially relinquished to the city Sept. 30.

After that, the building will almost certainly be demolished, though Victoria council has made no decision on what the 2½-acre Douglas Street site will be used for.

PLAYING FIELD USED

Children formerly served by North Ward now attend the new Blanshard elementary school nearby. They will continue to use to Hillside playing field until facilities can be provided at Blanshard school, says a report by the school board's buildings and grounds committee.

Few tears are being shed for the old school, which has been fiercely criticized by parents as unsafe in recent years. However, North Ward was a pride of the city when it was opened in 1894, simultaneously with filling because the land was swampy.

The site was then on the northern edge of the city. It cost $7,000, plus another $7,000 for Plans by the firm of Soule and Day called for eight rooms, each to accommodate 60 children.

The school was built by the firm of Elford and Smith for $29,013.17. The school board was proud of North Ward's tall tower.

Rumors that the building was unsafe began circulating in 1896. A civic investigation uncovered poor workmanship, inferior materials and danger that the stairs would collapse.

"More enlightenment before condemnation" was called for in a letter Saturday to the eastern district of the North Saanich Property Owners' Association.

The letter, by developers of an apartment-marina complex proposed for Tsehuu Harbor at the tip of Saanich Peninsula, accuses the association of being "ignorant of the facts—or misinformed."

The association had urged rejection of an application for a leasehold lease by Albert Yuen of Victoria, to build another marina complex in the harbor.

"More enlightenment before condemnation" was called for in a letter Saturday to the eastern district of the North Saanich Property Owners' Association.

The letter, by developers of an apartment-marina complex proposed for Tsehuu Harbor at the tip of Saanich Peninsula, accuses the association of being "ignorant of the facts—or misinformed."

The association had urged rejection of an application for a leasehold lease by Albert Yuen of Victoria, to build another marina complex in the harbor.

Public Debates Give True Indian Picture

The real Indian of today will be discussed by natives and whites in six public debates starting Sept. 30.

The series is co-sponsored by the Foster Parents Association of the Family and Children's Services, the South Vancouver Island Tribal Federation and the adult education division of the Greater Victoria school board.

BATTER PICTURE

Aim of the talks is to give the white community a better picture of contemporary Indians and their problems.

It is especially aimed at white foster parents caring for Indian children.

At 8 p.m. Sept. 30 in the common room of the Institute of Adult Studies, anthropologist Dr. R. B. Lane will discuss the historical background of B.C.'s Indians.

On Nov. 18 there will be a debate featuring a panel of Indians raised in white homes, and a panel of Indian foster parents.

Registration at $5 per family can be made through the adult education office at Box 700, Victoria.

Vietnam Critic Rebutted by Orphan-Tender

By JACK MYERS

Anti-American statements and disparaging remarks on Canada's role in Vietnam, made Friday by a medical record librarian, were labelled untrue Saturday by a native Victorian just returned from two years working with orphans in war-torn Saigon.

While visiting the West Coast last week to see relatives in Vancouver, Mrs. Claire Culhane called Canada's role in Vietnam "quite a farce."

Mrs. William Roeklein, 629 Mount Joy, said of Mrs. Culhane's remarks: "A lot of them are untrue."

"Mrs. Culhane says she is disillusioned. If Canada is making $500,000,000 from sales of war materials to the U.S. as she says, and then sit and criticize every action in Vietnam except those of Hanoi and Peking, then there is indeed a reason to be disillusioned," Mrs. Roeklein said.

Many of Mrs. Culhane's statements criticized use of Canadian materials by U.S. forces and she spoke of treating napalm burned children.

"Communist troops use napalm in South Vietnam too. There are lots of atrocity stories from both sides, but Mrs. Culhane didn't mention Viet Cong atrocities," said Mrs. Roeklein.

"Only the allies are condemned for fighting a war they have committed themselves to the Vietnamese people to fight," she said.

"If Canada were attacked by another power, these same people who scream the loudest about the terrible Americans would be the first to yell for U.S. help. I can't understand supposedly patriotic people lambasting out at their own nation and allies, and in effect aiding the enemy," she said.

"Her story simply can't be true. I was there during Tet, and all hospitals were working without interruption. If her group was moved out, they couldn't have been very damned important."

Mrs. Culhane said her hospital in Vietnam was taken over by the military as "a matter of convenience." She said the move was not necessary but patients had to be moved out.

This occurred during the big V.C. Tet offensive, their New Year period.

"Her story simply can't be true. I was there during Tet, and all hospitals were working without interruption. If her group was moved out, they couldn't have been very damned important."

Mrs. Roeklein said her offer of voluntary service to aid refugees swarming into Saigon during Tet, had also been refused, just as Mrs. Culhane's.

"It made sense. They politely refused me too, explaining the V.C. would immediately kill all people in the area if a westerner was found among them," she said.

"I agree with Mrs. Culhane that Canada's role is a farce but the cause is far behind. Now we must honor our commitments," she said.

The Roekleins moved to Victoria in June with the idea of starting an importing business featuring quality goods they have arranged for during their far east travels.

It Happened Between Lace and Gold Harp

The O'Reilly family still live in this house. Only recently Mr. and Mrs. John O'Reilly opened the home to the public as a museum.

It is an answer to an antique lover's dream. Literally packed with lovely old wood furniture and precious treasures too numerous to single out — all family possessions collected in the past 100 years.

But back to the ghost. Inez O'Reilly said me that the very first time she went to the house to meet John's late mother three years ago she was gripped by the most powerful sensation. She tingled all over, came out in goose pimples but was not frightened. "It was a warm feeling as if someone had put their arms around me," says Inez.

Then there was the little girl who came with her grandparents from California. The child shook so much that they had to take her outside.

Then only a short time ago, 80-year-old Amy Bird, a cousin to John's mother, who lives in the house, called for Inez to come quickly. She was as white as a sheet, says Inez. And Amy Bird had experienced this same powerful feeling and now she is sure that some unseen person — a ghost — came close.

All this Inez told me as we stood outside in the sunshine. I was probably being polite enough about the ghost but I was thinking I'd better go through the house as there wasn't going to be much to write about otherwise.

So we go in and I am completely fascinated — the dining room with its Irish crystal, crested silver, 100-year-old champagne and the Persian rug with each square representing an area in Persia — the shoe closet with a pair of fine white kid high laced wedding boots worn only the once — the old fashioned kitchen with masses of iron pots, the bedrooms, the morning room and lastly, the drawing room.

I'm taking notes madly as Inez tells me about the signed photograph of Queen Victoria — the original Brussels lace curtains, the gold harp and then right bang in the middle of all this, my own spine starts to tingle and then the most powerful sensation seems to surge right through me. I'm left shaking.

Inez kept on talking but I haven't a clue as to what she said while this happened.

As casually as possible, I said to Inez "Oh, I forgot to ask you — does your ghost wander about the house — I know you said you felt this when you first entered."

"Oh, no — it is always right here in this room, practically where we are standing. Amy was on this couch the other night."

I don't know if it was fear of losing my skepticism so suddenly or whether I just backed off from dramatizing the situation or from plain embarrassment but I couldn't say anything about it to Inez.

There has been much written about the "romance that never bloomed" between the beautiful Kathleen O'Reilly and Capt. Robert F. Scott of the Royal Navy. No one doubts the friendship between Scott and the O'Reilly family or that, as they said in those days, Robert Scott and Kathleen O'Reilly had romantic feelings for each other.

Jim Nesbitt doesn't think

PERSONAL MENTION

By Dorothy Wrotnowski

there was any more to it. He has the correspondence between Capt. Scott to Kathleen O'Reilly and he says Capt. Scott always addressed her as Miss O'Reilly. But what does that mean in an age when even wives addressed their husbands as "Mr. Brown?"

Another Victoria historian, Flora Burns does think so. She thinks the proposed but that there was parental objection, not because they didn't like Capt. Scott — because of monetary matters.

The definition of ghost in Webster's Dictionary is just too lengthy to go into here. But I think most people think of a ghost as an inhabitant of the unseen world appearing to the living in bodily likeness.

However, even if people don't believe in being able to see ghosts they usually like ghost stories. I classed myself among the non believers until the other day. I still haven't actually seen one.

The only time before that I ever came within meeting distance with a ghost, I completely fluffed it.

It was in England a number of years ago. I had gone down from London to Cornwall to stay with the Val French family when they lived near Liskeard up close to the downs.

The stone walls of this place were two to three feet thick and floors were of a thickness to correspond. I was in a bedroom in the new wing — built in 1794.

At the best of times I don't sleep too well in strange beds but on the first night in this house I couldn't get to sleep for a noise that sounded like running water. It came in so strong that I even got up in that ice cold room to look out of the window but all I could hear was the sighing of the wind in the trees.

Next morning at breakfast Grania French Blake inquired if I had slept well and I replied that I had indeed slept very well. Nothing unusual, just general amenities being exchanged.

A little later in the day, she brought the subject up again asking me if I hadn't heard any noises in the night — often guests had told of hearing strange things in this old place.

So I told her about the running water adding that now I had been around outside I knew it couldn't have been as the only water I had seen was a pool that didn't have any outlet.

After needing me quite kindly for a few minutes Grania confessed that the part of the house where I had slept had been originally a mill and that water from the pool ran in a culvert under the house.

Housewives' Pay Solution?

Mother Sleeps in Field

CHARLOTTETOWN (CP) — A farmer's wife who slept in the fields with her children in fear of her drunken husband could have been spared much money if housewives got a government-paid wage, the royal commission on the status of women was told Friday.

In a brief to the seven commissioners, Ruth Cadmore, of Kentross, P.E.I., said a special allowance for the housewife would give her enough money to help out with household expenses.

Mrs. Cadmore didn't turn up to read her brief—one of only two briefs to come to the commission from Prince Edward Island women. But it was tabled with the commission at a public hearing.

Mrs. Cadmore wrote she wasn't suggesting the housewife's allowance for high income families.

It would be for women who hadn't the health or means to cope with tasks demanded of them.

Her two-page brief mentioned one woman she knew whose husband drank, then came home and smashed things. Several times she had to take her children out of the house and sleep in a field instead of at home.

An allowance for such a woman would have helped her live a much more normal existence, the brief said.

And I had been third floor up from that.

Now what I had been expected to hear was the ghost. A former owner, a woman who didn't like strangers coming to the house, often had been heard rapping her cane in disapproval. Usually by someone sleeping in the house for the first time. One friend had had to cut short her stay through lack of sleep.

I only tell you this story to show that I have never even been slightly susceptible to ghosts. Not even when they are known to haunt a place. I merely hear a mundane sound of running water through thick walls and floors.

As I said earlier, whether you believe or not, most everyone is willing to listen to a good ghost story. And that is why I went to Point Ellice House the other day.

Most Victorians know all about Point Ellice House. It has been written up time and again by Victoria's dedicated historians, James K. Nesbitt who incidentally is credited with the addition of the word House to Point Ellice.

During Jim Nesbitt's course at the University of Victoria this autumn he will take the class for a visit to Point Ellice House giving a detailed history.

Just in case you don't know about Point Ellice House. It was built by the Hon. Peter O'Reilly well over 100 years ago. Peter O'Reilly married Caroline Agnes Trutch, sister of Sir Joseph Trutch, first lieutenant governor of British Columbia.

During this era, the O'Reilly home, standing on two acres of lovely gardens on the banks of the Gorge, had other well known Victorians as neighbors — the J. H. Turners, the Capt. M. W. T. Drake and the Capt. William Grants.

Today the place, though still secluded, is surrounded by smogging industry.

Inez O'Reilly thinks along the lines of Flora Burns. She says she is sure Capt. Scott proposed and when the family objected he even made plans for an elopement. And she goes further as she thinks Kathleen requested for the rest of her days that she didn't elope.

Kathleen O'Reilly never married. She died at Point Ellice in 1945.

Inez in getting the house ready to open to the public went through Kathleen's things and found two copies of The Sphere, containing the accounts of Scott's expedition to the Antarctic where he died from starvation in 1912.

And in Kathleen's room are her ermine, mink, fox and marten furs, her beautiful plumed hats, her little quilted rose lined blue slippers in front of her slipper chair and her picture in the gown she wore when presented to Court are still as she left them.

On the walls there are also two interesting pictures. Above the mantel is a picture of a couple shopping — the groom standing waiting with the horses. This picture is entitled "Love or Duty." On another wall is a picture of the same couple leaving the church with the clergyman and an irate father pulling up his horse, entitled "Too Late."

The O'Reillys and Amy Bird think the ghost is Mrs. Peter O'Reilly. She is said to have had a warm and vibrant personality.

No one will ever know, of course. It will depend on how romantic your imagination is in the conclusion you come to.

Out in the sunshine again on the way back to the Colonist I thought, "There must be some physical phenomenon in explanation." Mustn't there?

Inner Harbor, Outer Wharf Offer Romance

By JIM BRAHAN

The whine and squeal of winches, screaming gulls, rattling longshoremen's trucks, the smells of tide, tar and lumber — all have meant adventure, excitement, romance and mystery to generations of Greater Victorians.

Victoria's Inner Harbor and Outer Wharf for decades have provided daydream routes for thousands of children — and all ages — to the Orient, the South Seas, and ports of the world, as they watch foreign ships load and unload cargo. Strange tongues of officers and seamen provide a further exotic note.

The Inner Harbor recalls days long past when Indians gliding toward the strait would delight in shooting a shower of arrows through warehouse windows that were left unshuttered.

It also brings to memory creaking of oarlocks sounding loud on moonless nights as drunken or doped sailors were shanghaied for the great sailing ships lying at anchor in the distance.

Ogden Point with its 1,000,000-bushel grain elevator looming grey over the waterfront has cast shade for the shipping of the world.

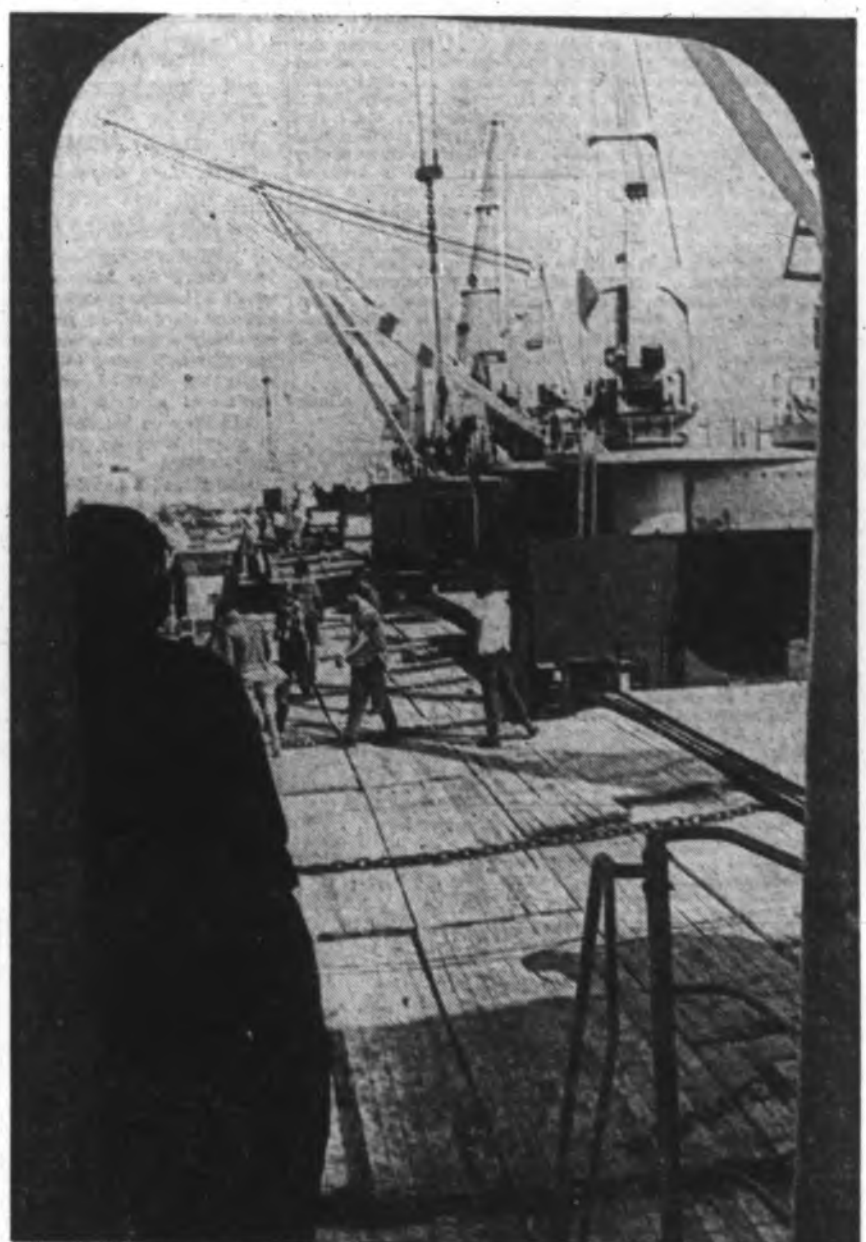

The half-mile-long concrete breakwater, protected to seaward by hundreds of 20-ton granite blocks, was started before the First World War and finished in 1917. It has provided pleasure for strollers who enjoy exhilarating sea breezes and bright sunshine, and anglers seeking food or relaxation or both.

Some of the world's most famous ships have docked at the Ogden Point piers, including the huge battle cruisers HMS Hood and HMS Repulse. Both were sunk by enemy action during the Second World War. For years Victoria was a regular port of call for the great White Empresses.

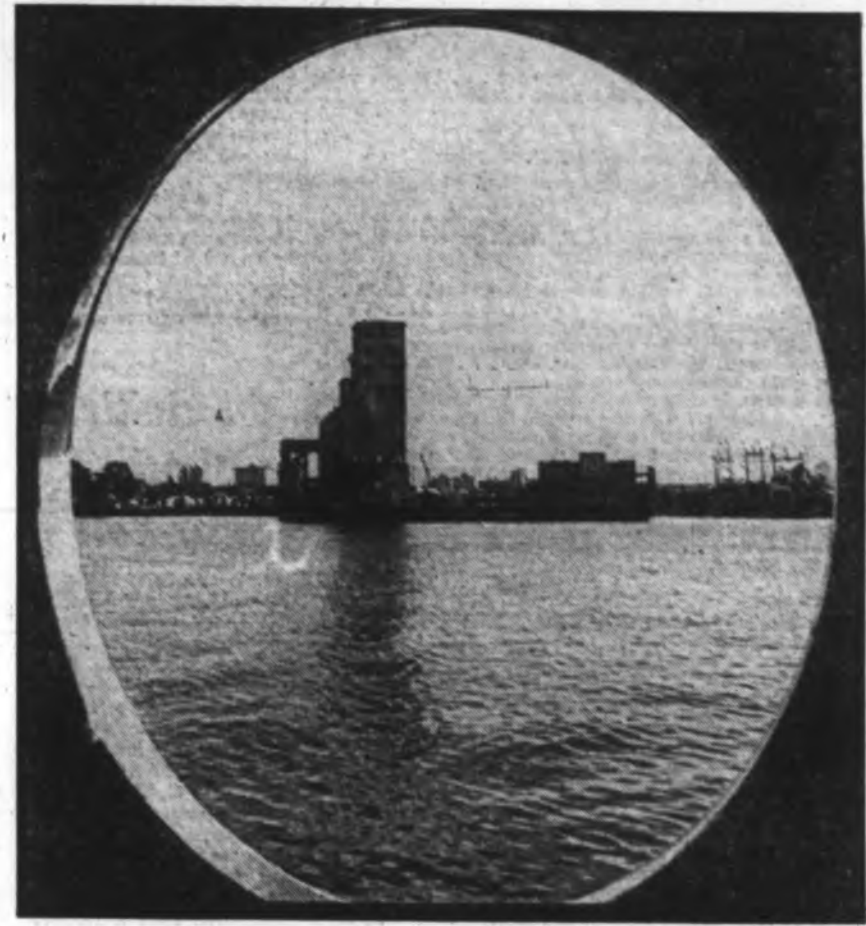

During recent times the port area has been mainly used for shipment of lumber and grain.

Although run down now, it has been termed one of the best deepsea terminals of its size on the coast.

It can berth five ships at a time, has rail and truck access to dockside, can load either from dock or scows, and is under single control.

It has become well known for quick turnaround of ships because of efficient handling of cargoes by longshoremen.

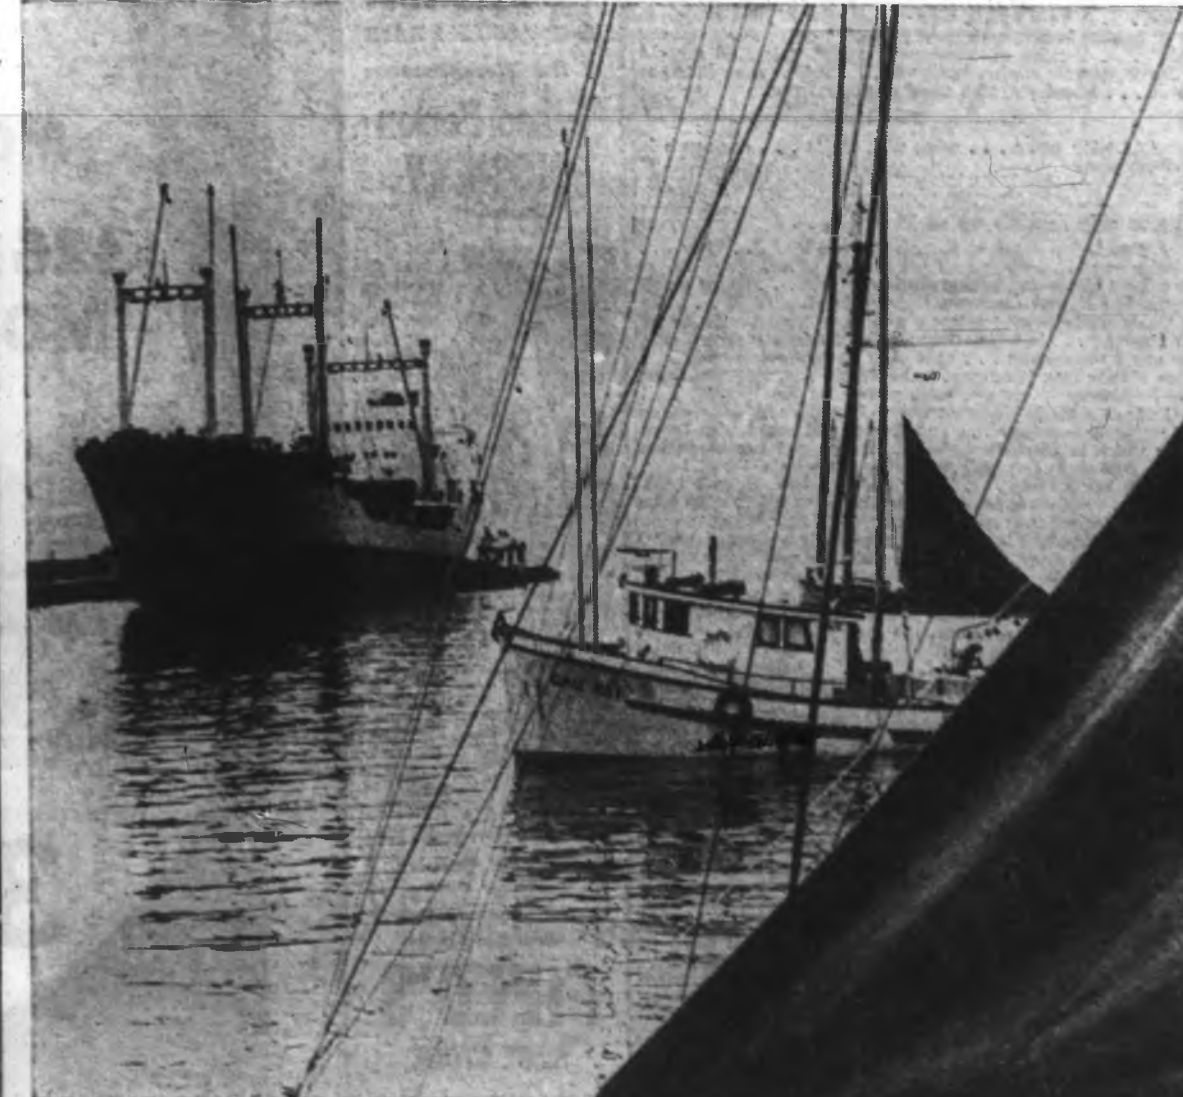

Victoria Chamber of Commerce has been campaigning for upgrading of Ogden Point facilities and has been successful in getting the dock operator, Canadian National Railways, to start an engineering study toward this end.

Stunning late-day dresses at Wilson's...

For a while it seemed to us that Wilson's hadn't been stocking too much in the way of really dressy late-day or what are sometimes referred to as "mother-of-the-bride" dresses... but they're more than making up for it now... with some new arrivals which will positively knock your eye out... for beautiful simplicity and sheer understated elegance... And what's more, several of the loveliest are in larger sizes like 16 and 18... good news for you ladies who complain you can't find a thing suitable to your age and figure... We noticed that many of these dresses have jackets... which make them doubly versatile... providing, as they do, a covered-up look for occasions where less formality is called for... There's a stunning black dress of silk worsted with cowl neck and rich jewel trim around the 3/4-length sleeves... same model in royal blue... Another royal blue dress in the same material has short sleeves and flattering all neckline edged with flowers made of iridescent paillettes... a very chic grey silk worsted jacket dress has diamante trim on cowl collar and front... plain jacket... There's a wonderfully wearable moss green lured knit dress... some sweet little metallic brocades... W & J Wilson Limited, 1221 Government St., 383-7177.

Barrila of Rome makes thigh-high leather boots that attach to a black girdle.

Great suits for the college crowd...

We can't guarantee they'll all still be there when you read this because of the time... (not credibility)... gap... but anyway we're going to tell you about the cute new suits for the young... in years of at heart... which we saw at Madam and Eve earlier this week... All have the tweedy look which is this season's favorite... styled with flair and verve... Two of them are English imports... small size 36, intended for the very petite figure... One is moss green, the other curry... with welt seaming, low slash pockets and back flap to the jacket... Flat gilt buttons front, back, and trimming the gaudy cuffs... Two herringbone tweed suits have high cowl collar, A-line skirt and big round amber buttons... the size 9 is in tones of blue, brown and grey, and the size 11 is a green-orange-grey blend... A lighter-weight wool suit has youthful Peter Pan collar, self-lap passing through loops fore and aft, and covered buttons... Size 18, in rusty tones with pink and green fleck... same in green with red and olive fleck, size 12... There's a nice classic suit with wide rounded revers in brown, blue and green tweed... this one, too, is a size 12... We noticed a couple of dress and coat ensembles... tweed coats with plain dresses... which we consider terrific value for only $75... Madame and Eve Shop, Trueman Alley, 383-7177.

Vogue forecasts longer coats over short skirts.

Beautiful oak furniture from England...

At long last a new shipment of Tudor Oak furniture from England has arrived at Home Furniture and another is en route... much to the relief of Home's Mr. Bartholomew, who was beginning to wonder if it would ever get here... Victorians are really taking this beautiful oak furniture to their hearts, and small wonder! It's the sort of furniture which grows on one, and of which one never gets tired... Besides which, despite all the hand-carving and expert craftsmanship, it costs no more... sometimes less, in fact... than other types of quality furniture... In this latest shipment there are Gothic bookcases with leaded glass doors... a Dutch dresser... court cupboard... a carved oak buffet with leaded glass windows... corner cupboards... small console tables called "Credence" tables... little coffers... foot stools with solid leather tops... plus all sorts of other things... Something we think very interesting is the cocktail bar with stools... great for a family room... And if you've a small apartment with practically no dining space, you'll love the "monk's dining table"... which is a high-backed settee folding over into a table... Real conversation piece!... Home Furniture Company, 525 Fort St., 383-5125.

This will be the biggest velvet year yet... Velvet evening dresses, skirts, capes, pants, tunics and culottes.

See these English place mats...

Other long-awaited shipments from England have arrived too... like the lovely table and place mats now on display at Montague Bridgman's... These are really very choice, and look elegant on a polished table... also, they are impervious to heat, being backed with cork or felt, so that the hottest plates or dishes may be placed on them with impunity... They come in sets of six or eight, ranging in price from $6.95 to $13.75... and for many of them there are matching coasters... All sorts of designs like flowers, birds, game birds, Regency London scenes, tinted etchings of old London landmarks, hunting scenes, still life, Dutch floral, old English lions, etc... We love all of them, but could scarcely tear our eyes away from the beautiful bird mats with their delicate colorings and porcelain-like background... A table set with these would lift gracious dining to new heights... As well as the new designs, old friends like "Golden Sovereign"... kings and queens of England in gold on round mats... are back again too... and there are any number of different scenes on coasters... some of them fun things like old cars, and international street signs... These English place mats and coasters would make wonderful wedding or Christmas gifts!... Montague Bridgman Limited, 511 Government St., 383-6821.

A long-sleeved black dirndl evening dress has a short diamante black bolero.

The new look in Joyce shoes...

Joyce shoes have always been great favorites with active women who demand smart, comfortable footwear... at prices which don't put too much of a dent in the clothing budget... Munday's have now received their fall shipment from Joyce... and after viewing the new models, we're no end impressed! To begin with, they have a very new look... and there are more dressy styles than ever before... many of them in patent leather, which is so very chic this season... A dressy patent pump called "Crescendo" has illusion height heel and a very pretty gold filigree buckle... "New Bolero", another elegant black patent pump, has a big peau de sole bow trim and walking heel... Also comes in brown and black calf... Another black patent, named "New Star", has low heel and old gold filigree buckle set on a patent oval... "Ring Around" gets its name from the ring trimming the high vamp... black or antique grey patent... and another patent, called "Beau Dandy" has low heel and faillie bow trim... Also in black, brown or navy kid... A very smart shoe of lizard calf print comes in black or reddish brown, with illusion height heel... aptly named "Midas"... Besides all these new dressy styles, all the old favorites in casuals are on hand too... Priced from $16.95 to $18.95 at... Munday's, 1269 Douglas St., 383-3211.

Straight wide pants... worn with tunics... are much in the fashion picture.

Big perm sale coming up at H of G...

Has your last permanent just about "had it"?... Then... lucky you!... you're all set to take advantage of House of Glamour's big annual permanent wave sale... which starts on September 25 and continues through to October 13... We know many well-groomed women who time their perms to hit this fall special... in which they get the very finest permanents by the city's top stylists... at a very considerable saving... Like we always say, it's smart to be thrifty... and when this results in looking smart too, well, you've hit the jackpot!... H of G offers some 16 different types of perms and body waves to suit every type of hair... and they've just acquired a brand new one which is specially designed for fine and unmanageable hair... leaves tresses soft and silky with a lot of body, and without being curly... We're told it's a fantastic holding power... welcome news to gals like us with baby-fine hair... We also understand that naturally curly hair is not always the boon we'd supposed it to be... it too can get unmanageable, especially in the rainy season... and of course the younger gals would rather be seen dead with curly locks... The answer is hair straightening by H of G... also at reduced prices during the perm sale... Book your appointment without any delay at... House of Glamour, 628 View St., 386-6182.

The addition of a weiskit is a great way of pulling blouse and skirt together.

These coasters are terrific...

Goodness knows we've experimented with a lot of different kinds of coasters in our time... but have never found anything to equal those hand-holed ones that look like little mats... are highly absorbent, and never stick to glass or table... We saw a delightful collection of these Cheticamp hooking coasters, chair seats, mats for under lamps, etc., and small wall pictures at the Handloom this week... Just arrived from Nova Scotia, they're made by Acadian women... who dye the yarns themselves, create their own original designs and do the hooking in their own homes... Round, square or rectangular, these mats come in various sizes, and designs are quite charming... flowers, light houses, sailing ships... just what you'd expect, in fact, from this sea-faring Atlantic province... Do drop in to the Handloom and see them... Cast an eye on the new shipment of Lord yarn from Iceland, too... This is spun from the un-dyed wool of Icelandic mountain sheep... Natural colors of white, brown, charcoal and three shades of grey... Loop knits up into most unusual and attractive sweaters, for which Handloom gives you the pattern of your choice... Several new designs in pullovers this year... some with Icelandic yokes, others with cable patterns... The Handloom, 18 Centennial Square, 384-1011.

Ann Landers

Dear Ann Landers: My husband promised to sell Duke, our pedigreed collie, to his brother George for $100 when we moved to an apartment. We moved last week and took Duke to his new home. Two days later Duke died. George insists the dog was sick when we brought him and he refuses to pay the $100.

I called George a cheap jerk and a few other names which he richly deserved. My husband is mad at me. He says maybe the dog was sick and that he's going to forget about the $100. I say his brother is a crook and we should keep on his back until he pays. What do you suggest?—EDNA

Dear Edna: A muzzle—for you. If your husband wants to forget about the money, let him. Perhaps the dog was sick when you sold him to George. A brother's right can be worse than a dog fight.

Dear Ann Landers: When I was 13 I saw John Forsythe in a movie. When he kissed the girl I got so excited I nearly fainted. I am now 30 and have gone beyond kissing, to put it bluntly, yet no one has been able to thrill me the way John Forsythe did when he kissed that girl. Am I crazy?—BOBBY ABOUT THAT

Dear Bobby: You aren't nuts, you just have a strong imagination and enjoy your fantasies more than real life folks. Try transferring some of that excitement to the one you're with, since your chances of getting John are rather slim.

Dear Ann Landers: You have said repeatedly that overeating may be compensation for the lack of love. Could it not also be a sign of too much love? How many women try to please their husbands by setting a table loaded with starved-for food, too much seasoning and too many calories? How many mothers stuff their children—EAT, it's good for you! How many "unclaimed jewels" try to impress eligible men by whipping up rich and tantalizing dishes? How many widowed women spend their days cooking and baking for bachelor sons?

It is pathetic that so many women try to win love by shovelling in the food. It would be an act of kindness if they served small portions of nourishing food and helped their loved ones to stay slim.

Nursing Awards Presented

Mrs. William Blair, regent of Florence Nightingale Chapter IODE, reported at a meeting held in the home of Mrs. W. R. Ronkley that she had presented two bursaries at the annual commencement exercises of St. Joseph's School of Nursing.

On behalf of the chapter Miss Elizabeth Moore, assistant director of nursing at Royal Jubilee Hospital, presented a Harold Menzies Memorial bursary and silver bowl to student nurse, Miss Joyce Kulachinsky, for proficiency academically and medical placements in her first year.

The presentation was made at the Bar Pin tea of the Royal Jubilee Hospital School of Nursing. The chapter donated $100 to the municipal chapter's project in support of the Pearkes Clinic.

The Municipal Bursary educational tea will be held at 2 p.m. Oct. 5 in the Students' Union Building, University of Victoria. Next meeting will be at the home of Mrs. Baker Oct. 18.

She presented the $100 Ida Melior Bursary to Miss Agnès MacKenzie for proficiency in bedside nursing for second year student. Miss Maureen Doernsma received the $100 Harold Menzies Memorial bursary and silver bowl for the highest average obtained during the first year.

Dear Mrs.: You're so right, please, that a 2-mile walk will do more for a person than chocolate souffle with whipped cream. — MRS. M-INCH

Dear Mrs.: You aren't nuts, you just have a strong imagination and enjoy your fantasies more than real life folks. Try transferring some of that excitement to the one you're with, since your chances of getting John are rather slim.

Dear Ann Landers: You have said repeatedly that overeating may be compensation for the lack of love. Could it not also be a sign of too much love? How many women try to please their husbands by setting a table loaded with starved-for food, too much seasoning and too many calories? How many mothers stuff their children—EAT, it's good for you! How many "unclaimed jewels" try to impress eligible men by whipping up rich and tantalizing dishes? How many widowed women spend their days cooking and baking for bachelor sons?

It is pathetic that so many women try to win love by shovelling in the food. It would be an act of kindness if they served small portions of nourishing food and helped their loved ones to stay slim.

A gracious country estate rest home set in beautiful gardens and lovely walks. Excellent nursing care and food. Only 10 miles from Victoria. This is an unsolicited advertisement inserted by a very satisfied guest.

Summer's End Only Beginning

The end of summer is to me like New Year's Eve. I sense an end to something carefree and untroubled, sandy and warm, cold and melting, barefoot and tanned.

And yet I look forward with great expectation to a beginning of schedules and appointments, bookshelves with little bits, freshly sharpened pencils, crisp winds, efficiency, and routine.

I am sadly aware of a great rushing of time as I lengthen skirts and discard sweaters that fit above the wristbones.

formals. You're going to own your own sports car before you've tried to build one out of orange crates and four baby buggy wheels. You're going to explore the world before you've explored the wonders of your own back yard.

If I could only be sure all the lessons are sinking in and are being understood. How can I tell you about disappointments? You'll have them, you know. And they'll be painful, they'll hurt, they'll shatter your ego, lay your confidence in yourself bare.

This is the fifth in a 10-part series excerpted from the book At Wit's End by Erma Bombeck.

Time is moving and I want to stop it for just a while so that I may snatch a quiet moment and tell my children what it is I want for them and what all the shouting has been about.

The moment never comes, of course. I must compete with Captain Kangaroo, a baseball game, a Mervyn record, a playmate, a cartoon or a new bike in the next block. So, I must keep these thoughts inside . . .

Too fast . . . you're moving too fast. Don't be in such a hurry to trade formulas for and sometimes cripple your initiative. But people don't die from them. They just emerge stronger.

I want you to hear the thunder, so you can appreciate the calm. I want you to fall on your face in the dirt once in a while, so you will know the pride of being able to stand tall. Learn to live with the words "No! You can't! You're out! You blew it! I don't know." And "I made a mistake."

Adults are always telling young people, "These are the best years of your life."

Are they? I don't know. Sometimes when adults say this to children I look into their faces. They look like someone on the top seat of the Ferris wheel who has had too much cotton candy and barbecue. He'd like to get off and be sick but everyone keeps telling him what a good time he's having.

Do not imagine for a moment that I don't feel your fears and anxieties. Youth does not have an immunity from disappointments and heartbreaks. No one does.

Fears begin the day you were born: fear of baths, bed wetting, the dark, falling off the sink where you are being bathed, strangers throwing you into the air and not catching you, going hungry, noises, open pins.

Later it's monsters, parents leaving and not coming back, death, hurts, and bad dreams. School only adds to anxieties. Fear of not having friends, being called upon and not knowing the answers, telling the truth when you're going to be punished, not getting to the bathroom in time, not being accepted, not getting the car, worrying about war, marriage, career, making money, being attractive to the opposite sex and making the grades to graduate.

Fears are normal. We all have them. Parents have the greatest fears of all. For we are responsible for this life which we have brought into this world. There is so much to teach and the time goes so fast . . .

A Lovelier You

Clothes Need Pretty Rest

By MARY SUE MILLER

How will this summer's clothes look to you next summer? It depends in a large part on how well you bed them down for their winter's nap.

To come out of a long slumber looking as great as Sleeping Beauty, clothes have to go to rest as pretty as she. Otherwise they will become progressively seedy. For daisy-fresh results, follow this general plan:

● Wash or dry clean all outerwear. Left over the winter, even a few grains of dust become ingrained. Not to mention spots!

● Don't neglect pressing of cleansed garments. Wrinkles may set if not pressed out. Rough-finished clothes are false economy.

● Do replace missing hooks, buttons and stitches; secure all fastenings. That way garments keep their shape and are ready-to-wear or close to it.

● Hang fabric dresses, jackets, and coats from wide-shouldered hangers; suspend skirts from skirt hangers. Cover each garment with a clip-on protector or place in dustfree, multiple storage bags. Fold knits, shorts and beach wear over thick rolls of tissue paper, place in tightly covered boxes and label for easy access.

● Similarly clean, wrap, box and label accessories—including shoes.

● Before stowing hangers and boxes, sweeten the resting place with a vigorous cleaning. Depending on the need, spray with moth or mildew preparations.

Thus clothes weather the season.

Petty Officers Very Fine

By KING LEE

A naval-type salute to the gentlemen of the Petty Officers' Mess, CFB Naden, for their attempts to bridge the generation gap.

More than 300 young people attended the teenage "happening" put on by Petty Officer Gordy Brown and committee at the Mess Thursday.

The purpose of the function is to get the teenage children of the petty officers together for dancing and food, something which normally wouldn't occur because of the diversification of the families of our local navy population.

"Nobody takes any interest in the kids," said PO Brown. "Nobody wants to take the time."

The affair, which costs approximately $500, had popular Bob Atwood as host and was well chaperoned.

"Other organizations are now following our example," PO Brown continued rather proudly. "Everytime's free for them except pop, which costs five cents."

Live music was provided by The Marquis, a five-piece group with a good, but conservative by today's standards, stage presentation.

Their more commercial-sounding numbers, like Alice Long, Brown Eyed Girl and Midnight Hour, were done extremely well. The Marquis have the ability to get the crowd on its feet and keep them there.

Jerry Adolphe, 18, drums; Dick Moore, 19, organ and lead guitar; Norm Piercy 19, bass; Len Knoke 21, lead guitar; and lead singer Tom Middleton, 19, make up the group which, in name, has been going for almost two years.

They claim their chief competition for engagements comes from the Peppermint Circle, who appeal mainly to the university crowd.

If you're planning your social life for next weekend it may be a good idea to catch The Marquis at the Old Forge, where they will be playing from Thursday through to Saturday night. But bring two good earplugs, you may need them both.

Hit LPs: Stoned Soul Picnic is the newest Fifth Dimension album. Still selling well in Victoria is Johnny Rivers' Realization album. Not available yet, but a sure hit will be Shades of Purple, a coming release for Deep Purple which will include Hush. Also one which is doing well is Crown of Creation by the Jefferson Airplane.

An interesting phenomenon is the sales of music from the Big Pink album, mainly because of The Weight, and yet Jackie De Shannon's single version is making the singles charts.

Owning Singles: 1, 2, 3 Red Light by the 1910 Fruitgum Company is the best selling single not yet charted. Jay and The Techniques have a new release entitled Singles Game. And then there are those of you who are just waiting with baited breath for Tiny Tim's new one, Bring Back Those Rockabye Baby Days.

Do You Wanna Dance has been revived by the Love Society and those Rice is Nice people, the Lemon Pipers, have Lonely Atmosphere coming. Ronnie Dove is trying to get on the Bobby Goldsboro bandwagon with a tearjerker, Bombay.

Teenager's World

Handwriting Can Be Vital

By KITTE TURNELL

Do you have tattered handwriting, like these two? Joan hoped a soldier would be her penpal. He looked at her childish scrawl and wrote back: "Dear Kid: Your letter was interesting, but do you have an older sister?"

John spent a whole weekend rehearsing what he was going to say at his first job interview. But they never called him, after looking at his application.

To help you improve your handwriting I first asked Richard Armour of Claremont, Calif., for his advice. He's a professor of English and also a writer and lecturer.

"Our teenage daughter used to write a very clear hand, but she thought it lacked character," he told me. "So she worked at it until she developed one that is quite distinctive. The only trouble is that now it's impossible to read it."

"Legibility is also lost by carelessness in forming letters. It is discourteous to make your reader strain and study because your letters are sloppy or slanted to an extreme."

"Hand writing is almost as different from person-to-person as fingerprints," Professor Armour concluded. "It will still be distinctive even if you slow down a little, and make a bit more effort to be clear and tidy. I've had to work at this myself. My handwriting is not only illegible, it's childish. So I try at least to make it easy to read."

★★★
Helen Edwards directs an employment agency in Southern California. "If you're filling out a job application," she says, "the way you write is more important. You are judged by it before an interview and later when your application is reviewed. Scribbling will get you nowhere."

Handwriting experts say: "Poor writing still doesn't have to be ugly."

"Loosen up your arm and fingers. Start by making eleven kisses — 'X's.' Then make a dozen little '2's to practice curves."

"Keep your writing arm on the desk. If it's off it, you make ten tracks. Keep the other hand right. Then your writing hand can be flexible. And be sure the writing surface and your chair are the right height."

★★★
"Strive for clarity and simplicity. Too many curlicues distract the reader from what you're trying to say. Open up your 'e's and dot your 'i's."

Safety on Long Drive Chance for Sharing

Dear Kitty Turnell: My boy friend and his parents have invited me to visit at their home, a long drive from here. Both my steady and I drive; we will travel in his car, leaving at night after he gets through work. My parents are afraid he will be so tired that we might get into an accident. How can I assure them we will be safe, since he is a good driver? Sharon

Dear Sharon: Tell them you'll keep talking to help him stay awake. To reduce fatigue, as recommended at a university clinic: take turns at the wheel. The passenger may propose a stop for coffee or a soft drink every two hours.

Dear Kitty: What do you do when you're trying to diet and you hate most of the low-calorie foods on the market? Bewildered

Dear Bewildered: Try some of nature's low-calorie treats — tomatoes, lettuce, cucumber, carrots, radishes, celery, etc., to fill you up between meals.

Ask your doctor about a diet that includes fresh grapefruit three times a day, cottage cheese, lettuce, water-cress, etc.

Dear Kitty: Here is a problem about me that I cannot figure out. In my class, there are other girls much more attractive than myself. But many say that I'm quite popular among the boys. Through friends I trust, I've been told that there are girls who resent me, because I get along with boys so well. Is this envy or jealousy? If I have to go through any more of this I'll be a total wreck. Please advise. A.D.

Dear A.D.: Share the attention. Invite other girls to join you when boys cluster around you. Arrange double-dates. Spare time to pay attention to girls who seem lonely without over-concentrating on boys-only.

Dear Kitty: When is it proper to address a girl by initials — for first and middle name — instead of using her first name? It seems strange to me to call a career woman M.K. instead of Mary. Do you agree? Best Friend.

Dear Best Friend: Yes. First name is more feminine — and friendly — and informal than initials.

New Paper Started By Tough U.S. Gang

PHILADELPHIA (Reuters) — The city of Philadelphia gave birth recently to a new newspaper — an eight-page tabloid published by one of the city's toughest juvenile gangs.

The gang, called The Morrocos, operates in the ghetto of North Philadelphia and only last spring was involved in three killings.

The first issue of the paper, called Dig This, featured news stories, commentaries and poetry by members of the gang, photos of community activities and advertising by local businessmen.

A private civic group put up the $300 needed for the paper's first issue, but the staff hopes that the 10-cent tabloid will become self-supporting.

The first day's proceeds amounted to $41. The youths debated what to do with the money.

"We don't have a safe," said one youth.

"I wouldn't leave it here if I had two safes," added managing editor Steven McIntosh.

They finally turned the money over to Kitty Caparella, a 22-year-old Temple University journalism student serving as adviser to the publishing project.

Rebel Priests Repeat Stand

WASHINGTON (AP) — Most of 51 dissenting priests, at odds with their cardinal over Pope Paul VI's birth control encyclical, reaffirmed Saturday their public stand in opposition to the Pope's ban on birth control by artificial means.

Each of the priests expressed his position in writing to the cardinal Saturday. Later, 44 of them issued a statement reaffirming their position.

Their action raised the possibility of punitive action by Patrick Cardinal O'Boyle who had given the rebellious priests until noon Saturday to recant or face canonical penalties.

Each of the priests expressed his position in writing to the cardinal Saturday. Later, 44 of them issued a statement reaffirming their position.

"declaration of conscience" issued shortly after the Pope's pronouncement.

In the new statement, they said "we believe in the long practice and tradition in the Catholic Church which respects freedom of conscience and that without being unfaithful to the Church we cannot desert our position, namely, that we will respect the intelligence and responsibly formed consciences of the people we serve."

Among the signers was the Rev. T. Joseph O'Donoghue, dismissed as assistant pastor of a Washington church for delivering a sermon quoting high church officials who disagree with the encyclical. The priests declared they were convinced that their position "is in no way an attack on the teaching authority of the Pope or on the encyclical on birth control but rather a reflection of the pastoral tradition of the church."

Mrs. Nan Hadden was installed as president of St. Andrew's and Caledonian Society at the annual installation of officers in Holyrood House. James McAlay was installing officer and was assisted by George Gunnis and Mrs. Kay Inglis.

Other officers are James Kirk, first vice-president; Wallace Milligan, second vice-president; Charlie Cameron, secretary; Mrs. Winnie McKernie, treasurer; Mrs. Gina Simpson, financial secretary; Jim McKernie, warden; Stewart Simpson, outer guard; Mrs. Jessie Irwin, chaplain; Ian Duncan, piper; Mrs. Jean Stewart, pianist; and Miss Georgina McKay, historian. Joseph Sutherland is past president.

Hospital Turns

By HENRY BESIER

NANAIMO — Nanaimo regional hospital has started to switch over to the metric system, says Gordon Frith, administrator and first-vice president of the B.C. Hospital Association.

"I have appointed a steering committee to decide the ways and means how this will be done," Mr. Frith said. "But I fully expect changeover to be completed within two years."

He described the conversion as consistent with modern hospital thinking and said that ab-

Christmas In Orbit?

HOUSTON (UPI)—Three Apollo spacemen may spend Christmas Day circling the moon, it was learned Saturday.

Sources said Space Agency planners recently created new blueprints to orbit the three-man crew around the moon at an altitude of some 70 miles. The astronauts would spend a full day in lunar orbit, possibly Christmas Day itself.

The new plans call for astronauts Frank Borman, James Lovell and William Anders, the second Apollo crew, to circle the moon 10 times in what is called a "command module." A lunar landing module, to take the astronauts from command module to moon surface, would not go along this trip.

A prime objective of the mission, sources said, is to photograph in black-and-white and in color the five sites for Apollo landings on the Moon. The earliest opportunity for U.S. spacemen to land at one of these sites is believed to be the fall of 1969.

Stairway For The Star

CLEVELAND (AP) — From Robert Ellsworth, political director for Republican presidential nominee Richard Nixon:

"Mr. Hubert H. Humphrey is now perfecting the technique of the six-step statement. This consists of (1) a lengthy opening statement, (2) his objection to its interpretation, (3) a further clarification, (4) an explanation of his running mate's disagreement, (5) a tortured denial that it really differs from administration policy, (6) a plea that it was only something that he read in the newspaper and wasn't really anything new in any case."

Hanoi on Humphrey:

Aggression Disciple

HONG KONG (AP) — North Vietnam's Radio Hanoi described Vice President Hubert H. Humphrey Saturday as "the faithful disciple" of President Johnson who was nominated only to continue a "policy of aggression against Vietnam."

It was the second blast from Hanoi in two days on the two chief candidates in the U.S. presidential election. A broadcast Friday slammed Republican Richard M. Nixon as a "violent beligerent" who wanted to send U.S. troops to Vietnam in 1954, when it was part of Indochina, to help the French at Dien Bien Phu. At the time Nixon said U.S. troops might have to be sent if the French withdrew but expressed hope that no troops would actually go.

"ENGINEERED" Humphrey's comment on the Democratic candidate "said Humphrey's nomination was 'engineered' by Johnson, who wanted a candidate who would not point out to the American people Johnson's towering crimes of aggression against the Vietnamese people."

The broadcast contended Humphrey is committed to carry out Johnson's policy in Vietnam.

"The only difference is that, when there is a tribunal, another will stand before the court as the criminal while Prof. Johnson will be enjoying his old age with the millions of dollars he amassed while he was carrying out and escalating the most expensive and most harmful war in the history of the United States," the broadcast said.

CHICAGO BLOODSHED

Radio Hanoi said the convention that nominated Humphrey in Chicago had been "one of bloodshed and violence against those opposing the war in Vietnam—by far the most troubled and confused convention in the entire history of the Democratic party."

"But it ended like a volcano mountain giving birth to a mouse. After all the turmoil and fighting over Johnson's policy in Vietnam, it delivered just another Johnson policy for Vietnam," the broadcast said.

U.S. Campaign

Humphrey Troubled By Twisted Tongue

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Vice-President Humphrey appeared Saturday to bar any future change in his Vietnam stand, saying the Democratic party's plank "is my position."

Humphrey explained that sometimes he varies his answers on Vietnam in order to keep from boring people.

SOME THINGS

But when he changes a word, Humphrey complained, "Then someone says, 'I think he has changed his mind. He is wobbling.'" Humphrey called himself a free spirit, saying he meant that sometimes his tongue gets him in trouble.

"I say some things and, gosh,

I wish I hadn't said it. I just don't like peas and corn and radishes every day," Humphrey explained. "I like a little broccoli and succotash."

The plank — unlike that of the doves which called for an unconditional bombing halt — would approve halt only when there is some evidence of peaceful response from the enemy.

Elsewhere:

● In Norfolk, Va., Sen. Edmund Muskie said if "the circumstances and facts" in the case of the captured intelligence ship Pueblo "justify an apology, we should make it."

● Richard Nixon took to the fields, sat at the controls of a big combine and harvested some golden Iowa corn while visiting Des Moines. After the exercise, he declared that farmers "have been the stepchildren of the Great Society."

● Third-party presidential candidate George Wallace, pausing to scold young hecklers told University of Kentucky students that "our system has fed and clothed people all over the world and if you don't like it, what other system would you use?"

Wallace also picked up the support of Georgia Governor Lester Maddox who said Wallace is the only candidate to "speak out and offer the people what they demand."

Funeral, Then On to LBJ

Harriman Heads for Home

PARIS (UPI) — Ambassador Averell Harriman, chief U.S. negotiator at the war talks with North Vietnam in Paris, will fly to the United States today for the funeral of his mother-in-law, it was announced Saturday.

Well-informed sources said the 78-year-old diplomat was expected to take the opportunity of his visit to brief President Johnson and top foreign policy aides on the deadlock talks.

Harriman will fly to New York for the services scheduled for Monday, then on to Washington before returning to Paris later in the week.

Meanwhile, U.S. command reported in Saigon Saturday a major allied invasion of the demilitarized zone with infantry and tanks, and two other big sweeps in South Vietnam, accounted for 335 dead North Vietnamese and Viet Cong.

American and South Vietnamese troops in the drive to blunt any new Communist offensive across the zone were relatively light: six killed and 44 wounded, the command said.

The thrust into the zone Friday touched off one of the biggest battles of the war in the six-mile-wide strip set up in 1954 as a buffer zone between the two Vietnams.

Pushing into the southern half of the zone for the fourth time this year, the allied task force reported killing 158 entrenched North Vietnamese threatening the American outpost at Gio Linh and other border for-

THE CORPORATION OF THE DISTRICT OF SAANICH BY-LAW NO. 2300

A BY-LAW TO PROVIDE FOR THE ESTABLISHMENT OF A MUNICIPAL SANITARY SEWERAGE ENTERPRISE INCLUDING THE CONSOLIDATION OF EXISTING SEWERAGE SYSTEMS

- WHEREAS the Council has from time to time adopted by-laws for the construction of sanitary sewerage works in various areas of the Municipality of Saanich under which debentures of the Corporation are presently outstanding or authorized;
- AND WHEREAS it is deemed desirable and expedient to:
- (a) Provide for the establishment of a municipal enterprise consisting of all municipal owned and operated works, equipment and facilities for providing sewerage facilities and for their management, maintenance and operation;
 - (b) Provide that from the first day of December, 1968, no levies shall be imposed, raised, or levied under the terms of the said by-laws;
 - (c) Define an area of the Municipality of Saanich which, in the opinion of the Council of the Corporation, will be served by sewerage facilities within a period of five years from the first day of December, 1968;
- AND WHEREAS it is deemed desirable and expedient to provide that the total amount required to be raised annually for the retirement of the debt created by the above by-laws and the interest thereon and the debt hereafter to be created for capital expenditure on or in connection with the said municipal enterprise and the interest thereon, shall be levied and raised by a uniform parcel tax being an equal levy in dollars on each parcel of real property taxable for general purposes in the area defined in this by-law;
- AND WHEREAS it is deemed desirable and expedient to provide that the said uniform parcel tax may be reduced in respect of real property any present or potential occupier of which has paid all or a portion of the debt and debt charges, excluding interest, in respect of that portion of the sewerage system of the Corporation are presently outstanding or authorized;
- AND WHEREAS it is deemed desirable and expedient to provide that from the thirty-first day of December, 1968, an amount at least sufficient to meet the annual estimated expenses of management, maintenance, and operation of the said municipal enterprise (less any amount assumed by the Corporation at large) shall be raised by imposing an annual charge against the owners or occupiers of real property within the Municipality of Saanich connected to the sewerage system in accordance with the provisions of Clause (c) of Subsection (1), Section 212 of the Municipal Act, and the amount so raised shall be applied firstly to meet the annual expenses of management, maintenance and operation and, secondly, in retirement of the said debt;
- AND WHEREAS it is deemed desirable to authorize the construction of sewerage works within the area defined in this by-law, or as such area may, from time to time, be extended, and to incur the expenses and debt therefor, in accordance with the provisions of Section 212 of the Municipal Act;
- THEREFORE the Municipal Council of the Corporation of the District of Saanich enacts as follows:
1. There is hereby established a municipal sewerage enterprise consisting of all municipally owned and operated works, equipment and facilities for providing sewerage facilities and for their management, maintenance and operation of all such works, equipment and facilities and the sewerage system of the Corporation.
 2. From the first day of December, 1968, no levies shall be imposed, raised or levied under the terms of any by-laws of the Corporation in respect of sanitary sewers under which debts are owing by the Corporation or under which debentures of the Corporation are presently outstanding or authorized.
 3. The area which, in the opinion of the Council, will be served by sewerage facilities within a period of five years from the first day of December, 1968, is that area shown, outlined on sheets numbered 1 to 6 inclusive of a plan prepared by Neville W. Lyle, P. Eng., dated the 2nd day of September, 1968, and marked "Plan to accompany By-Law No. 2300 'Sewerage Consolidation and Enterprise Establishment, By-Law, 1968'" hereinafter referred to as the "sewerage area".
 4. From the first day of December, 1968, the total amount (excluding the Corporation's portion of the cost assumed under Section 4, and any sum for the retirement of the debt available from the amount to be raised as provided in Section 4) required to be raised annually for the retirement of the debt created by the above by-laws and interest thereon, and for the debt hereafter to be created for capital expenditure on or in connection with the said sewerage enterprise and interest thereon, shall be levied and raised by a uniform parcel tax being an equal levy in dollars on each parcel of real property taxable for purposes within the "sewerage area," or such area extended as hereinafter provided.
 5. The said uniform parcel tax shall be reduced by the sum of $5.75 per year in respect of each parcel of real property any present or previous owner or potential occupier of which has paid all or a portion of the debt and debt charges, excluding interest, in respect of that portion of the sewerage system of the Corporation are presently outstanding or authorized;
- and the said reduction shall continue in respect of each such parcel for the same number of years as that for which payments as aforesaid were made in respect thereof, or until the total of the said annual reduction is equal to the total of the payments made as aforesaid, whichever is the shorter period.

New Pueblo Theory Boosts Release Line

By LEWIS GULICK

WASHINGTON (AP) — The new North Korean exposure of the Pueblo crew has strengthened an assessment here that they will eventually be set free. But it produced no signs of an imminent breakthrough in the deadlocked U.S.-North Korean talks at Panmunjom.

This conclusion came Saturday from U.S. officials who combed through extensive reports of a four-hour news conference staged by the North Koreans Thursday. For the first time since the Pueblo's Jan. 23 capture, when anti-communist reporters saw the U.S. prisoners.

NEW ASPECT

What seemed new from the affair was North Korean disclosure of a U.S. intelligence ship order, expanded allegations of U.S. spyboat intrusions and non-communist accounts indicating the Pueblo crew is in relatively good physical condition.

The U.S. government has already sought to demolish the North Korean claim that the February, 1966, U.S. Navy reconnaissance order carried aboard the Pueblo authorized the electronic eavesdropping vessels to scoop within three miles of the North Korean coastline.

SAILING ORDERS

It made public what it said were specific Jan. 5, 1966, sailing orders to the Pueblo telling its skipper, Commander Lloyd M. Bucher, to steer outside North Korea's claimed 12-mile limit. As for the new claim of 17 Pueblo penetrations inside the 12-mile limit — previously they listed only six — Washington officials said the North Koreans produced no more evidence for such charges than before.

Actually, since the Pueblo kept radio silence until the day of her capture, neither side has produced proof of her exact whereabouts.

The reports by Japanese newsmen invited to the news conference with Bucher and 13 of the 82 surviving crew confirmed accounts from earlier news conferences attended only by Communist journalists that the men appeared to be in good health. The pairs which North Korea is taking to portray the prisoners as well treated indicate to U.S. authorities the captors intend eventually to release the men — rather than carry out veiled threats to sentence them to death on allegations of criminal espionage.

FOR PROPAGANDA

The theory here has been that the North Koreans will hold on to the Pueblo captives as long as they think they can use them to score propaganda gains.

High-Power Helps Relief Drive

LAGOS, Nigeria (AP)—American pilots who won medals in Vietnam have joined former U.S. Peace Corps volunteers in an attempt to launch a million-dollar helicopter shuttle to get relief to starving refugees of the Nigerian civil war.

Under the auspices of the United Nations Children's Emergency Fund, the project is a high-powered, American operation which already has made an offer to buy 10 helicopters the Nigerians have hardly used for lack of parts and pilots since the war started with the secessionist Biafrans in eastern Nigeria 14 months ago.

Former pilots with combat experience in Vietnam and Korea have come from civilian jobs to fly helicopters in southeastern Nigeria where at least 250,000 refugees have crowded through lines into federally held territory.

Two weeks after landing in Nigeria, pilots and support crews were waiting for clearance from the Nigerians to fly to Calabar two H-19 helicopters purchased for $50,000 from a used helicopter lot in Tucson, Ariz.

AMERICAN HEAD

The two helicopters will shuttle at the rate of two round trips an hour between Calabar and Uyo, 30 miles west, in the heart of the refugee concentration, says Charles C. Roberts, American head of the project.

The aircraft will carry 1,500 pounds of food and medicine on each trip in a parachute hanging from a hook under the belly. Roberts said the pilots will slip the chute off the hook, drop it at the destination and then return to base for another load without landing.

SOLD BY AUSTRIANS

Eventually he hopes to have 20 helicopters "daisy chaining" 500 feet over the rain forest and swampland. Hence, the offer to buy 10 Nigerian helicopters, most of which are old British-made craft sold to the air force by Austrians.

But two craft will fly the first two weeks "just to prove the concept," said Brandt Berk, American financial analyst who plans to spend three months with the outfit as chief pilot.

FOOD PILES UP

If the shuttle works it could move nearly 15 tons an hour. Food now is piling up in Calabar, 400 miles east of the federal capital of Lagos in an area recaptured by the federals between last October and March.

Plans for the project started in August with a conference between Roberts and U.S. state department officials. Although the program is under UNICEF, most of the money comes from the United States.

Estimates of early costs hit $250,000.

PILOTS VOLUNTEER

Most of the pilots volunteered for the jobs after obtaining leaves of absence. Dick Lever, for example, is a pilot for United Airlines. He won a Distinguished Flying Cross in Vietnam.

All are being paid for their work here.

"They're not losing money but they make a lot more in the United States for the time they're putting in," said Roberts.

"The first time anyone shoots at me," said one pilot, "I'm getting out of here."

Chinese Purge Hits 50

HONG KONG (AP) — The anti-Communist Hong Kong Times Saturday named 45 Chinese army generals, an admiral and four political commissars which it said have been purged in the last year by Communist party Chairman Mao Tse-tung and Defence Minister Lin Biao.

Heading the list were Marshal Ho Lung and Senior Gen. Lo Jui-chung, two top-ranking men in China's military hierarchy before Mao's Cultural Revolution began.

OTHER SOURCES

Both had been previously reported purged by other sources.

Ho Lung was deputy chairman of the national military commission, China's highest military leadership body. Lo Jui-chung was secretary-general of the commission and also chief of the army general staff.

Also listed was Lt.-Gen. Hsiao Yu Yung, chief administrative officer of the commission who, according to previous reports reaching Hong Kong, had been accused of being one of the masterminds behind an alleged plot to overthrow Mao.

IMPORTANT POSTS

Others on The Times list either held — or, if the report is not true, still may hold — important national or regional military posts.

The Chinese language Times said it had compiled the list from information gathered by its own sources inside China.

There was no way to confirm the report in Hong Kong, but it was true it would mean that a sizable segment of China's old-line military leadership had been wiped out.

Israeli-Held Land

Nasser Vows Liberation Near

CAIRO (AP) — President Gamal Abdel Nasser told a cheering audience Saturday that liberation of Arab territories seized by Israel in the June 1967 war is approaching. In his first public appearance since returning from medical treatment in the Soviet Union, Nasser addressed a session of the Arab Socialist Union National Congress at Cairo University.

Nasser gave a generally low-keyed statement, however, with few notes of patriotic fervor.

The president drew applause with a tribute to the Egyptian armed forces and their "constantly increasing ability to meet their responsibilities."

Sacred Duty

He declared that the armed forces constitute "our basic fundamental hope" for eventual liberation of areas seized by Israel.

Nasser declared that such liberation is a "sacred duty" which he said would be the third and final stage of the army's rehabilitation.

"It is both our right and duty to mobilize all our efforts for this liberation," he said.

The struggle will be difficult, he added, because Egypt was facing not merely Israel but also those who support and back Israel. The phrase is his usual way of referring to the United States.

Second Stage

"Rebuilding the armed forces is the way and the method for the liberation of our occupied lands," he said.

The army's temporary superiority is ended. It ended last September. We are now in the second stage of repelling aggression and this will be followed by the stage of liberation."

Nasser gave no dates nor did he suggest any tentative timetable.

Nasser told the Congress that both the Republican and Democratic American presidential candidates are competing for the Jewish vote with promises to Israel.

Nasser referred to both Hubert Humphrey and Richard Nixon by name in reply to a question from the floor of the congress' first regular session.

Nasser was asked if he thought there were any pro-Arab leaders in America.

Nasser replied: "Humphrey was here once. So was Nixon. They heard our views on the subject of Palestine and seemed to understand them."

"I met each of them personally and explained these views to them."

"However, the question of presidential elections is something else. Each candidate wants to win and for this all means are good."

THE GOLDBERG POLICY

Africa

In the sixth of a series of articles outlining a new foreign policy for the U.S., Arthur Goldberg strongly urges U.S. disentanglement from remaining economic, military and scientific ties with South Africa in a bold move to end the nation's intensified and unyielding policy of apartheid.

Party Rift Threat To Smith

Smith

SALISBURY, Rhodesia (AP) — Prime Minister Ian Smith emerged Saturday stronger in his struggle against Britain but shakier at the helm in his own country.

Ruling of the Rhodesian High Court appellate division Friday that Smith's government has achieved legal status gave him long-awaited internal legal recognition.

At the same time, swelling revolt in the ranks of the ruling Rhodesian front, while not at this stage seriously threatening Smith's leadership, could shatter party unity.

Smith came to power by being more right-wing than his predecessor, Winston Field. Now he is under attack by opponents more right-wing than he is.

Two months ago he dismissed the leader of the right-wing faction, Internal Affairs Minister William Harper from the Cabinet. This week, Harper's colleague, External Affairs Minister Lord Graham, quit the Cabinet because of differences with Smith.

The split in the party was laid bare when Smith's plan for a new constitution got a majority of only 11 votes in a total of 423 at the party congress. Those opposing the plan wanted more entrenched power for whites. A party official said it passed only because of 70 abstentions.

Right-winger Robin James will propose at a party meeting in Salisbury Monday that the proposals accepted by congress be rejected because they do not insure the survival of the white man in Rhodesia.

Nevertheless, Smith's personal popularity insures him widespread support in the party and the country and no one at present seems likely to displace him.

He strongly defended his constitutional proposals Saturday as permitting Africans to advance on merit.

Tanzania Funds Cut From South Africa

DAR ES SALAAM, Tanzania (AP) — The government banned all payments by Tanzanians to South Africa starting Saturday.

A statement said Tanzania banned trade with South Africa five years ago as a "demonstration of distaste for the policies perpetrated by the apartheid regime." At the time, however, it was felt it would be impractical to forbid payments connected with transactions such as insurance, tourism and education.

"This anomalous situation has now been corrected," the statement added.

Biafra Plans Exile Seat, Guerrillas

Aid Flights Resumed

GENEVA (AP) — The International Red Cross Committee said Saturday it had resumed flights of food and medicine to starving Biafrans Friday night despite the increasing danger.

The committee suspended flights two days ago after leaving that one of two available aircraft was damaged and the other was too close to the combat zone.

Colonist-London

DAKAR, Senegal — A Biafran government-in-exile is now in the planning stages, following a policy decision taken last week by the four African countries that recognize the secessionist state.

The French government, which favors Biafra, has been closely involved in discussions of the plan. It formed the government will sit in Libreville, capital of Gabon.

DE GAULLE PROMISE
A memorandum submitted to the leaders of the four countries — the Ivory Coast, Gabon, Tanzania and Zambia — admitted that a federal victory is now possible, and therefore their best policy, it said, would be to encourage guerrilla warfare in Biafra.

French president de Gaulle's promise of eventual recognition of Biafra has enhanced the prospects of a government-in-exile being formed.

ADVANCED STAGE
A cabinet minister in one of the former French West African territories said the four countries which have recognized Biafra would have no alternative but to aid Biafran guerrillas if France also recognized her.

Meanwhile, preparations for guerrilla warfare have reportedly reached an advanced stage in some areas close to the present firing-line and also in countries closely associated with the Biafran war effort.

Big Cat On Loose

WINTERBURN, Alta. (CP) — A jaguar which escaped Saturday from captivity mauled one person, apparently without causing serious injury.

The cat broke out of a canine club at Winterburn on the outskirts of Edmonton. Police warned residents in the area to use caution if they see the jaguar.

France's Quebec Man Given Higher Status

PARIS (Reuters) — Pierre de Menthon, French consul-general in Quebec, has been promoted minister plenipotentiary, an official announcement said Saturday.

De Menthon now is the most senior diplomat in Canada after the ambassador in Ottawa, Pierre Sraud.

No immediate official comment on de Menthon's promotion was available. But observers here saw the move as a continuation of France's policy of strengthening ties with French-speaking communities.

They noted that the appointment came very shortly after Prime Minister Trudeau's accusation that a French official, acting as an "agent," had "agitated" among French-speaking Canadians in Manitoba, but they said they did not feel the appointment was in any way a retaliation.

A Canadian government spokesman said it is assumed in Ottawa that the de Menthon promotion is merely a change in personal rank.

It would not affect his job status in Canada as consul-general. Such a change could only be made with the agreement of the Canadian government.

The French embassy here was informed of the activities of Philippe Rouillon, described by Prime Minister Trudeau as a "secret agent of France," from the time he arrived in Manitoba until he left Canada, an embassy spokesman said Saturday.

However, the embassy was not aware in advance that he was coming to Canada, the spokesman said.

He said the French consul in Winnipeg provided the embassy with details of the visit last month and Rouillon's activities.

The spokesman said he believes the external affairs department here must also have been informed of Rouillon's activities by department officials in Winnipeg.

Plaintive Calls Clue

Police 'Hero' Linked to Murder

HOLLYWOOD, Fla. (AP) — Police Saturday charged that the man who called head-quarters and said "Please catch me!" after killing a 12-year-old girl was the policeman who later "found" the child's body.

A warrant charging Robert John Erler, 24, with the Aug. 12 murder was issued and a man-hunt began just nine days after Erler quit the Hollywood police force for what he termed personal reasons.

Erler was accused of killing Marilyn Clark with five shots in the head.

Detectives matched routine tape recordings of Erler's patrol car conversations with tapes of the anonymous caller who began the Aug. 12 conversation by saying: "I just killed three people."

Hollywood police refused to disclose the chain of evidence that led to Erler, but police in neighboring Dania, where Erler had worked briefly as a patrolman, said they supplied the missing links.

Dania Police Chief Donald Parton said the break came when the girl's mother, Dorothy Clark, 42, of Clarkston, Ga., recalled Thursday she had met a man in a khaki uniform with a round shoulder patch on Dania Beach the night of the shooting.

Mrs. Clark also was shot six times and remains in a Fort Lauderdale, Fla., hospital, recovering from temporary amnesia and facial paralysis.

She is still unaware her child is dead.

Parton said Mrs. Clark said she had gone with the man to a trailer and that he (Parton) had bought such a trailer Sept. 1 from Erler. He said Dania police were khaki uniforms when Erler was an officer there and Erler still had his uniform in the trailer.

After Dania patrolman Henry Peterman recalled, "He's the hero—he found the body in the industrial park,"

Parton went to Hollywood police.

When he reported finding Marilyn's body at 6:30 a.m. Aug. 12, Erler told detectives he had been stopped by a man and woman who had spotted the girl's body in a clump of roadside weeds. He said the couple had left before he had obtained their identification.

Eight minutes later the mother was found, near death, in her car four miles away.

Visitors Miss Action At Crofton Pulp Mill

Story and Picture
By AGNES FLETT

CROFTON — Eighty parliamentarians went to Crofton mill Friday to see the action by the machines were silent.

It was the first day of the company's reduced newsprint production policy which has been described as temporary. The curtailment, blamed on overproduction in the industry, affected two newsprint machines.

And one of the group Commonwealth Parliamentary Association wondered: "If there is overproduction, why are they building more pulp mills in B.C.?"

The association visits B.C. every five years. During its visit to Vancouver Island, trips were made to Cathedral Grove near Port Alberni, Crofton, and Victoria where members joined with a second association party from the West Indies.

The first party comprised representatives of the Canadian Senate, Commons, and provincial governments.

There was also a conference planned in the legislative chambers when members discussed parliament's image, television cameras in parliament and ways of speeding parliamentary procedure.

James Walker, of Ontario, who was appointed last week as Prime Minister Trudeau's parliamentary secretary, said the tour is an "educative tour."

It was intended to help provinces to understand each other's problems and the problems of the federal government.

Mr. Walker said the conference does not make resolutions, but members return to their individual governments with new ideas.

A number said they were impressed with B.C.'s beauty, vast natural resources and great potential. A Quebec member said the Crofton mill was similar to those he had toured in his own province — but larger.

been invited to a meeting on Sept. 21 in the high school cafeteria where the program for band beginners, together with demonstrations of the various instruments used, will be outlined.

Students will be offered instruction in instrumental music, including flute, clarinet, saxophone, trumpet, trombone, French horn and drums by the district's music teachers led by Alastair Hight, supervisor of music for the school district.

First session will start Oct. 3. Intermediate band classes will open on the same date. Mr. Hight, announcing the program, said special arrangements can be made to include any junior secondary student.

Valley Liberals Elect New Officers

PORT ALBERNI—More than one hundred members attended an Alberni Valley Liberal Association meeting recently when a new slate of officers was elected.

A motion to waive constitutional provisions was approved to enable the election to be held.

Elected president was Mo Baouche, with Tommy Hamilton and Miss Shirley Burfield as first and second vice-presidents. Secretary will be Mrs. Cecile McKinnon and treasurer Joe Stanhope.

BUSY YEAR

The meeting was told by George McLean, former president, that the association had one of its busiest years which culminated in the election of the constituency's first Liberal MP.

Mr. McLean predicted that the Liberal influence would also be felt in provincial elections and that the Liberals could also form the next provincial government.

He paid tribute to the part played by the young Liberals in the year's work.

YOUTH INSPIRATION

"Youth inspired us to get up and go in this Liberal association," he told the members.

During the evening members heard a speech by Mr. Durante from Ottawa by Mr. Durante.

It was taped just following the speech from the throne.

Mr. Durante repeated his election promise to work to be worthy of the trust placed in him by the voters and to work for all his constituents wherever they might live in the riding, or whatever their political affiliations might be.

Mr. Durante said he expected to be in the district between Oct. 1 and Oct. 14. He urged the group to send a strong representation to the provincial Liberal convention in Penticton Oct. 5 and Oct. 6.

DELEGATES NAMED

Eleven delegates were nominated to attend, Dennis O'Brien expressed the thanks of the association to Mr. McLean and the group gave a standing ovation to Mr. McLean for his work during his terms in office.

Durante Urges Letters

PORT ALBERNI — Liberal MP Richard Durante has urged residents of the Comox-Alberni riding to submit briefs and letters to the federal task force on housing and urban development.

It begins a series of public hearings in Ottawa this week-end. Hearings are planned for Victoria on Nov. 6 and Vancouver on Nov. 7 and Nov. 8.

Mr. Durante said: "There are no restrictions on the length of submissions to the task force. They may be as short as a letter or as long as a major brief. The task force is concerned about every aspect of the housing question — financing, money supply, land supply, design, etc., as well as proposals which will provide more housing per dollar expended."

He said that letters and briefs should be made available by Oct. 26, with as much advance notice as possible.

Letters should be forwarded either through him or sent direct to the transport department, he said.

Nanaimo Liberals

Winch Joins Fight For Nomination

NANAIMO—Former district magistrate and family court judge, Eric Winch of Parksville has announced his intention to seek the Liberal party nomination in the coming federal by-election for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands.

Mr. Winch made his official announcement Saturday at a press conference.

He said: "All my life has been directed to this point. Basically I made this decision because of my interest in people. The best interests of the public can only be served to some degree of finality in parliament."

LOGGING FIRM

Mr. Winch has lived on Vancouver Island for 20 years. He has been an employee of a logging firm, a member of the school board in Parksville-Qualicum, a member of the Parksville Village Commission, is president of the Nanaimo Regional Hospital Society, and has served as magistrate for about five years.

With his past experience Mr. Winch said he can represent "this community and constituency well in Ottawa."

BIG SURPRISE

He has been a member of the Liberal party since 1958 and has previously supported Liberal candidates in the Comox-Alberni area.

One of the big surprises of Mr. Winch's press conference, was the appearance of Dr. Larry Giovando of Nanaimo, who from 1952 to 1955, served as a Conservative member of the B.C. legislature and then sat as an Independent. During the June 25 federal election, Dr. Giovando was a supporter of Conservative candidate Jeffrey Brock.

Mr. Winch said that he has forwarded his resignation as magistrate to the attorney-general's department and that he will not again seek the position.

POLITICAL LIFE

Saying that he regretted resigning his position, Mr. Winch commented: "Some people say I should continue on as magistrate because they feel there is much to be accomplished. These people also say I shouldn't become involved in the difficulties and frustrations of political life."

"The position of magistrate is one of responsibility and dignity and I believe it is regarded as such by the public generally. When a person gives up such a position to take up political life, it is obvious he is serious."

Mr. Winch's announcement brings to three the number of people who have officially announced their intentions to seek the Liberal nomination.

The others are real estate agent Mladen Zorkin of Nanaimo, and private investigator Frank Grane of Wellington.

The Liberal nominating meeting will be on Oct. 19.

John Norton of Qualicum, vice-president of the Conservative Association, said that he was naturally disappointed at Dr.

Giovando's announcement that he would support Mr. Winch.

"But frankly nothing surprises me these days," he said.

The Conservatives will hold a general meeting early next month. They will announce their candidates for nomination later in October.

Family Tie Broken

NANAIMO — Eric Winch broke family tradition Saturday when he joined those seeking the Liberal nomination for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands.

His father was CCF leader of the opposition in B.C. during the 1930s and his brother Harold is NDP MP for Vancouver East.

Aid for Nurse

PORT ALBERNI — A Port Alberni public health nurse, Georgina Maryniak, has received a bursary loan from the Registered Nurses' Association of B.C. to continue her studies in public health.

NDP Leader T. C. Douglas is a close friend of the family.

"I am proud of my father and of my brother," said Mr. Winch at Saturday's press conference.

He said his life's goal has always been pointed to the direction he took Saturday — politics.

He said in his early life, when he was a social worker, a logger and later in a management capacity in the logging industry, he was always concerned about people.

Asked what he would do if he was not nominated, he said: "I'm still in good standing to take up law again. It would be rather odd, appearing in courts of magistrates whom I taught in my capacity as senior magistrate," he said.

Referring to Mr. Douglas's comment about the need for mainland to the island transportation link, Mr. Winch said he did not think Mr. Douglas was promising a bridge or even a survey for one.

He said he felt Mr. Douglas must know that Georgia Strait waters are not shallow, and that money for a survey would just go down the drain.

An indication of his potential popularity was given by one of his supporters. The supporter said he had talked to a man whom Mr. Winch sent to jail for several months. The man declared he would vote for Mr. Winch if he is nominated.

MARCHERS PREPARE for long walk Saturday at entrance to Chemainus Kin Park. There were 234 people starting out on 22-mile route. About 140 finished. Below, Ian Shaw, 10, of Chemainus, and Lance Fetchko, 12, of Crofton, study route map before setting out. Money raised from long march will go to a number of organizations including Red Cross and Cancer Society. As soon as walkers finished, their first thought was probably a salve for those aching feet.

DUNCAN—A total of 224 young people and adults took part Saturday in a Miles for Millions walkathon. About 140 reached the finish of the 22-mile route.

It is hoped that money from 994 sponsors will amount to more than $2,000.

The walk was from Chemainus Kin Park to Crofton, Herd Road, Westholme and back to Chemainus.

The event was sponsored and organized by the Christian Youth Association of Chemainus. Proceeds are earmarked for the Red Cross, Cancer Society, Chemainus Mission to Seamen, and the Westholme Indian Halfway House.

The first four walkers to reach the finishing line, after four hours and 45 minutes, were Paul Descoteau, Scotty Thompson, Angus Skinner and Mike Andrews.

First adults to finish were Ald. Rois Harder of Duncan, who was sponsored by B.C. Telephone Co. and Dave Monroe, sponsored by Duncan Kiwanis Ambulance Society.

The last stragglers were still on the road late Saturday afternoon, nine hours after the starting gun sent the walkers on their way at 8:40 a.m.

Fright Ends Evening Out

UNION BAY — An evening from the home of Ross with a friend recently ended in a frightening experience for 14-year-old Linda Kennedy of Union Bay.

Linda, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Doug Kennedy, was returning from the home of her friend, Ross, with a small dog named Tubby. As she went down McLeod Road, she decided to take a short-cut along the E&N right of way.

She knew that there was a trail which would bring her to the rear of her Tappin Road home.

As she walked along, she heard a crashing sound in nearby bushes. At first she thought Tubby was chasing something, but then realized he was still at her side.

The noise alarmed her so much that she left the track and forced her way through blackberry bushes and underbrush hoping to find the trail.

LEGS SCRATCHED

She was wearing shorts and her legs were soon scratched and bleeding. The rubber thongs she was wearing were torn off by the underbrush.

Tubby barked furiously and the rumbling noise continued.

Linda couldn't find the trail but managed to reach home. Her parents said she was hysterical and bleeding profusely from cuts on her arms and legs.

FIRST AID

Mrs. Kennedy gave her first aid and her father and brother, Danny, went out to search for the prowler.

They failed to find anything but on the gravel beside the railway there were distinct tracks of a bear and cub.

Hunter Has Escape

GOLD RIVER — A Gold River man was thankful Saturday for a lucky escape.

C. V. Trach of Maquima Crescent parked his pick-up truck in Uccoma Valley, near Gold River, to go hunting Saturday. When he returned, he found a stray bullet had ripped the plywood rear of the truck, entered the cab, snapped the top of the steering wheel, and ricocheted out through the windshield.

Two Young Girls Join Winners' List at Coombs Fall Fair

Fifteen-year-old Sharon Raper of Coombs, left, was top winner among 4-H competitors at Coombs Fall Fair held this weekend. She gained success with other attractions such as pet parade, women's nail-driving contest, tug-of-war, handicraft displays and produce and livestock exhibition.

Holstein calf Miss Sophisticate. Libby Thompson, 16, won award for best hack with her horse Phares. Fair featured 34-event horse show in addition to

Influenza Increase Reported

NANAIMO — The number of influenza cases in the Central Vancouver Island area is increasing, according to Nanaimo Board of Health.

Officials said Friday they are anticipating a different strain of flu virus to strike the area in a few months. It is Hong Kong flu which has already killed 26 people in the British colony.

It has been a cause of concern recently in Lower Mainland health officials.

Israeli-Held Land

Nasser Vows Liberation Near

CAIRO (AP) — President Gamal Abdel Nasser told a cheering audience Saturday that liberation of Arab territories seized by Israel in the June 1967 war is approaching. In his first public appearance since returning from medical treatment in the Soviet Union, Nasser addressed a session of the Arab Socialist Union National Congress at Cairo University. Nasser gave a generally low-keyed statement however, with few notes of patriotic fervor. The president drew applause with a tribute to the Egyptian armed forces and their "constantly increasing ability to meet their responsibilities."

Sacred Duty

He declared that the armed forces constitute "our basic fundamental hope" for eventual liberation of areas seized by Israel. Nasser declared that such liberation is a "sacred duty" which he said would be the third and final stage of the army's rehabilitation. "It is both our right and duty to mobilize all our efforts for this liberation," he said. The struggle will be difficult, he added, because Egypt was facing not merely Israel but also those who support and back Israel. The phrase is his usual way of referring to the United States.

Second Stage

"Rebuilding the armed forces is the way and the method for the liberation of our occupied lands," he said. The army's temporary superiority is ended. It ended last September. We are now in the second stage of repelling aggression and this will be followed by the stage of liberation."

Nasser gave no dates nor did he suggest any tentative timetable. Nasser told the Congress that both the Republican and Democratic American presidential candidates are competing for the Jewish vote with promises to Israel.

Nasser referred to both Hubert Humphrey and Richard Nixon by name in reply to a question from the floor of the congress' first regular session.

Nasser was asked if he thought there were any pro-Arab leaders in America.

Nasser replied: "Humphrey was here once. So was Nixon. They heard our views on the subject of Palestine and seemed to understand them."

"I met each of them personally and explained these views to them."

"However, the question of presidential elections is something else. Each candidate wants to win and for this all means are good."

Africa

In the sixth of a series of articles outlining a new foreign policy for the U.S., Arthur Goldberg strongly urges U.S. disengagement from remaining economic, military and scientific ties with South Africa in a "horror of that nation's intensified and unyielding policy of apartheid. Party Rift Threat To Smith

Smith

SALISBURY, Rhodesia (AP) — Prime Minister Ian Smith emerged Saturday stronger in his struggle against Britain but shakier at the helm in his own country.

Ruling of the Rhodesian High Court appellate division Friday that Smith's government has achieved legal status gave him long-awaited internal legal recognition.

At the same time, swelling revolt in the ranks of the ruling Rhodesian Front while not at this stage seriously threatening Smith's leadership, could shatter party unity.

Smith came to power by being more right-wing than his predecessor, Winston Field. Now he is under attack by opponents more right-wing than he is.

Two months ago he dismissed the leader of the right-wing faction, Internal Affairs Minister William Harper from the cabinet. This week, Harper's colleague, External Affairs Minister Lord Graham, quit the cabinet because of differences with Smith.

The split in the party was laid bare when Smith's plan for a new constitution got a majority of only 11 votes in a total of 423 at the party congress. Those opposing the plan wanted more entrenched power for whites. A party official said it passed only because of 70 abstentions.

Right-winger Robin James will propose at a party meeting in Salisbury Monday that the proposals accepted by congress be rejected because they do not insure the survival of the white man in Rhodesia.

Nevertheless, Smith's personal popularity insures him widespread support in the party and the country and no one at present seems likely to displace him.

He strongly defended his constitutional proposals Saturday as permitting Africans to advance on merit.

Tanzania Funds Cut From South Africa

DAR ES SALAAM, Tanzania (AP)—The government banned all payments by Tanzanians to South Africa starting Saturday.

A statement said Tanzania banned trade with South Africa five years ago as a "demonstration of distaste for the policies perpetrated by the apartheid regime." At the time, however, it was felt it would be impractical to forbid payments connected with transactions such as insurance, tourism and education.

"This anomalous situation has now been corrected," the statement added.

Biafra Plans Exile Seat, Guerrillas

Aid Flights Resumed

GENEVA (AP)—The International Red Cross Committee said Saturday it had resumed flights of food and medicine to starving Biafrans Friday night despite the increasing danger.

The committee suspended flights two days ago after learning that one of two available aircraft was bombed and damaged and the other was too close to the combat zone.

Colombian-London Telegraph Service

DAKAR, Senegal — A Biafran government-in-exile is now in the planning stages following a policy decision taken last week by the four African countries that recognize the secessionist state. The French government, which favors Biafra, has been closely involved in discussions of the plan. If formed, the government will sit in Libreville, capital of Gabon.

DE GAULLE PROMISE: A memorandum submitted to the leaders of the four countries — the Ivory Coast, Gabon, Tanzania and Zambia — admitted that a federal victory is now possible, and therefore their best policy, it said, would be to encourage guerrilla warfare in Biafra. French president de Gaulle's promise of eventual recognition of Biafra has enhanced the prospects of a government-in-exile being formed.

ADVANCED STAGE: A cabinet minister in one of the former French West African territories said the four countries which have recognized Biafra would have no alternative but to aid Biafran guerrillas if France also recognized her. Meanwhile, preparations for guerrilla warfare have reportedly reached an advanced stage in some areas close to the present fighting-line and also in countries closely associated with the Biafran war effort.

A build-up of arms and ammunition, food, and medical supplies is taking place.

Couple Hurt

An unidentified young couple suffered undetermined injuries early this morning when the car in which they were riding struck the rear of a parked truck at Alpha and Burnside. Witnesses said the woman was thrown against the windshield of the car and suffered severe head lacerations. Force of the impact drove the truck over the curb. The injured couple was taken to St. Joseph's Hospital for treatment.

PARIS (Reuters) — Pierre de Menthon, French consul-general in Quebec, has been promoted minister plenipotentiary, an official announcement said Saturday.

'Secret Agent'

Itinerary Watched By French Embassy

OTTAWA (CP) — The French embassy here was informed of the activities of Philippe Rossillon, described by Prime Minister Trudeau as a "secret agent of France," from the time he arrived in Manitoba until he left Canada, an embassy spokesman said Saturday.

However, the embassy was not aware in advance that he was coming to Canada, the spokesman said.

He said the French consul in Winnipeg provided the embassy with details of the visit last month and Rossillon's activities.

The spokesman said he believes the external affairs department here must also have been informed of Rossillon's activities by department officials in Winnipeg.

Plaintive Calls Clue

Police 'Hero' Linked to Murder

HOLLYWOOD, Fla. (AP) — Police Saturday charged that the man who called headquarters and said "Please catch me" after killing a 12-year-old girl was the policeman who later "found" the child's body. A warrant charging Robert John Erler, 24, with the Aug. 12 murder was issued and a man-hunt begun just nine days after Erler quit the Hollywood police force for what he termed personal reasons.

Erler was accused of killing Marilyn Clark with five shots in the head. Detectives matched routine tape recordings of Erler's prison car conversations with tapes of the anonymous caller who began the Aug. 12 conversation by saying: "I just killed three people."

Hollywood police refused to disclose the chain of evidence that led to Erler, but police in neighboring Dania, where Erler had worked briefly as a patrolman, said they supplied the missing links.

Dania Police Chief Donald Parton said the break came when the girl's mother, Dorothy Clark, 42, of Clarkston, Ga., recalled Thursday she had met a man in a khaki uniform with a round shoulder patch on Dania Beach the night of the shooting.

Mrs. Clark also was shot six times and remains in a Fort Lauderdale, Fla., hospital, recovering from temporary amnesia and facial paralysis.

She is still unaware her child is dead.

Parton said Mrs. Clark said she had gone with the man to a trailer and that he (Parton) had bought such a trailer Sept. 1 from Erler. He said Dania police were khaki uniforms when Erler was an officer there and Erler still had his uniform in the trailer.

After Dania patrolman Henry Peterman recalled, "He's the hero—he found the body in the industrial park."

Parton went to Hollywood police.

When he reported finding Marilyn's body at 6:30 a.m. Aug. 12, Erler told detectives he had been stopped by a man and woman who had spotted the girl's body in a clump of roadside weeds. He said the couple had left before he had obtained their identification.

Eight minutes later the mother was found, near death, in her car four miles away.

Sayward Revisited

By DORIS FARMER TONKIN

I couldn't believe it was the same place. Not that any spot would look the same after more than 32 years, even if preserved from the hand of man. The Sayward Valley, though, has another dimension, a road connecting it with Campbell River and south.

On my first visit in 1936, the Valley was a sort of lost world, the only access being by water. A steamship which carried passengers and freight called twice a week. Now that traffic rolls in over a highly scenic, black-trapped highway to catch the ferry for Prince Rupert at Kelsey Bay, the impression is entirely different. The once secluded settlement is part of the mainstream of Vancouver Island life.

Sayward has gone through many phases since the days when a large Indian village at the mouth of the Salmon River was the centre of population. In the 1880s white men started to trickle in, some of them to stay for the rest of their lives. The Hastings Sawmill Company started logging operations in 1906 which lasted until 1912. In 1914 the government opened the land for settlement, and after that, agriculture became the mainstay. In the late 1930s there was a swing back to logging, which now dominates the scene.

It was during the farming era that my husband, two children, and I arrived to look at a farm. We were obliged to stay from the Thursday evening upon which we disembarked from the steamship until Saturday morning, when the same vessel picked us up on her return voyage. We were dropped off at Campbell River where we had left our car.

I've never forgotten the brief stay in that self-contained community which was such a happy, friendly place. The community spirit was outstanding, and the people made the most of what they had, enjoying life without the modern conveniences which are more often a headache than a help, in a manner that has become a lost art.

The settlement, which struggled up the valley rather than being concentrated in one area, consisted of a number of farms, two schools, a community hall, store and post office. At the Kelsey Bay Wharf, there was another post office and store. There was an active Women's Institute, which still functions, and the Columbia Coast Mission Boat took care of both spiritual and corporeal needs of the residents. Oh yes, another amenity was a district nurse. There was a hospital at Rock Bay, which wasn't too far away by water.

High school education was attained either by correspondence or going "outside." Nowadays children go by bus to the senior secondary school in Campbell River. Health care is also available at the Campbell River clinics and hospital.

There was talk of war on that long ago visit, which was only three years away from the Second World War. I remember our host, J. B. Howes saying:

"If war comes, we are far enough away from it here that it won't effect us too much."

How wrong he was! The war brought about that which the settlers had been agitating for, for years, a road link to Campbell River. The threat of a Japanese invasion or a bombardment of incendiary bombs, made such a road important. Also a number of troops belonging to the three branches of the service, were stationed at a little fort on York Island across from Kelsey Bay, and some at Kelsey Bay to guard the channel.

The presence of these troops made a difference to the social life of the valley and must have made the residents feel that they were in the thick of things.

At the time settlement began in the Valley, the port of access was called Port Kusam. A little settlement consisting of a store and post office and an hotel called the Ruby House was established by a Dane, Theodore Peterson, and his partner, Wilson, at a little bay south of what is now Kelsey Bay. The "Port" could best be reached by water but there was a trail of sorts over which mail was carried to the Valley.

Sayward got its own post office in 1911 largely as a result of the extra population created by the employees of the Hastings Company. Otto Saecht, an immigrant from Germany, had established a trading post a few miles up the Salmon River, about the turn of the century. He became postmaster as well, and the name Sayward was chosen as the district was already known by that name, in compliment to a pioneer lumberman, William Parsons Sayward.

It was not until 1925 that the Kelsey Bay post office was opened and named in honor of the family which operated a store and telegraph office at the wharf.

Somewhere along the line, Port Kusam went out of business. Around about 1927 the property was bought by a family from Victoria and the Ruby House used as a dwelling. Now all the old buildings are derelict, and only one family lives there in a modern home built near by.

In a spirit of exploration, I drove to Port Kusam on a shining May morning, over a road which reminded me somewhat of the old Cariboo trail over Pavilion Mountain down which the prospectors slid and slid before the building of the Fraser Canyon road.

There was one thing to be said for the Port Kusam trail, and that is that no one lives on it except the Kelses, and if you avoid school times, you are in no danger of meeting anyone. Mrs. Kelse drives her two little girls to and from school daily.

I think they told me the trail was about two miles long, but to me it seemed like twenty. The trip was worthwhile though, for the little bay is unbelievably beautiful and there is something fascinating about a ghost town.

Until the Hastings Company laid a logging railway up the valley, the main thoroughfare for the settlers was the Salmon River, and the mode of travel by dugout canoe. After the logging company left, the settlers pulled up the ties to build bridges and even houses, and made a road on the railway bed.

When Kelsey Bay became the port, road entry was difficult. A rocky eminence with the mouth of the river at its foot barred the way. With great effort, what they call the "rockcut" was achieved and a narrow twisty road built around the base of the cliff.

I'll never forget that road! The morning we were to catch the boat on that long-ago visit, a radio signal gave the information that the steamship would be docking in about three-quarters of an hour. The Howes' farm was six miles up the valley. We had a frantic scramble getting ourselves packed and ready and had to miss breakfast. Ivan Howes, the son of the house, bundled us into his half-ton truck and set off at what was a high speed for gravel roads. When we reached the rockcut, we tore around it with the horn going full blast as a warning to anyone who might be coming. With the rock wall on one side and water below, it was a hair-raising experience.

The rockcut is still there, but since the first-class highway was put in to serve the ferry terminal the road is much wider and smoother, being hard surfaced.

There was quite an influx of settlers to the valley after the First World War, and as I said, the trend was to farming. Very fine crops were grown, for the soil is good, but the problem was marketing them.

There has always been a certain amount of logging carried on in a small way. In fact that is where I first saw a derrick engine in action.

About 1937 a large concern came in and built a camp at the mouth of the river. This has since been bought out by one of the "giant" lumber companies, and been considerably expanded.

A permanent residential camp is being built on what they call the "bawmle" across the highway and up the hillside from the working camp. When complete this will be the largest permanent camp in the Pacific Northwest.

Sad to say, very little farming is carried on in the valley now. The whole character of the place has changed. Beautiful still, and some how a little outside, it is no longer the little lost world. Besides the ferry to Prince Rupert, and the highway to the south, float planes connect the valley with logging camps and settlements to the north on the island and across on the mainland.

It seems as if tourism is becoming a secondary industry.

RARE BIRDS AT HOME . . . on City Lot

By MARGARET E. TREBETT

It could be a jungle in Java, but it isn't. It's a backyard filled with greenery where a Port Alberni man, a leading Canadian breeder, is raising rare and colorful game birds.

Ed Miller, who operates a garage in downtown Port Alberni, had a hobby which became an avocation, and his contribution to the project of preserving the pure strains of some of the world's most beautiful birds has earned him international recognition.

He was recently installed as an official of the American Game Birds Breeders' Co-Operative Federation.

He specializes in pheasants from southeast Asia, but he also breeds in captivity the rare Java green peacock, a beautiful bird and unusual because both male and female of the species flaunt the same bright colors. The Java green, unlike most peacocks, is a silent specimen. Its beauty is enhanced by the absence of the continual squawk of the usual peafowl.

In the pheasantry at the back of the large lot on Wilkinson Road are approximately 150 birds of 15 breeds.

Mr. Miller became interested in raising game birds five years ago when his son Gregory then four years old, saw a pair of golden pheasants at the PNE. The youngster wanted them and his parents thought he should have pets to teach him responsibility. Before the Millers realized that Greg's pets were not of a pure breed, they had become completely enthralled and the game bird farm was underway.

Although Ed took over, his young son has continued his interest and is now a real help in caring for the birds. Mrs. Miller, just as keen as the menfolk, has read extensively and is well up on the theory of game bird breeding.

Mr. Miller wanted to keep his birds in a pleasant environment and from the building of the first pen he has concentrated on providing both shade and sunlight. Each pen has trees and ferns, some of the green stuff growing as prolifically as though it was in a jungle.

From the first two or three simple pens, the set-up has grown to include a hatchery and a brooder house. A pent house effect has been added where the more delicate specimens may be kept in heated enclosures if the temperature goes down to the freezing point.

This summer the incubator has been in almost constant use and brooders are continually occupied by the insignificant little creatures which give no indication of the gorgeous birds they will become. Invariably, though they will have a spectacular adulthood, the baby birds are a dull brown.

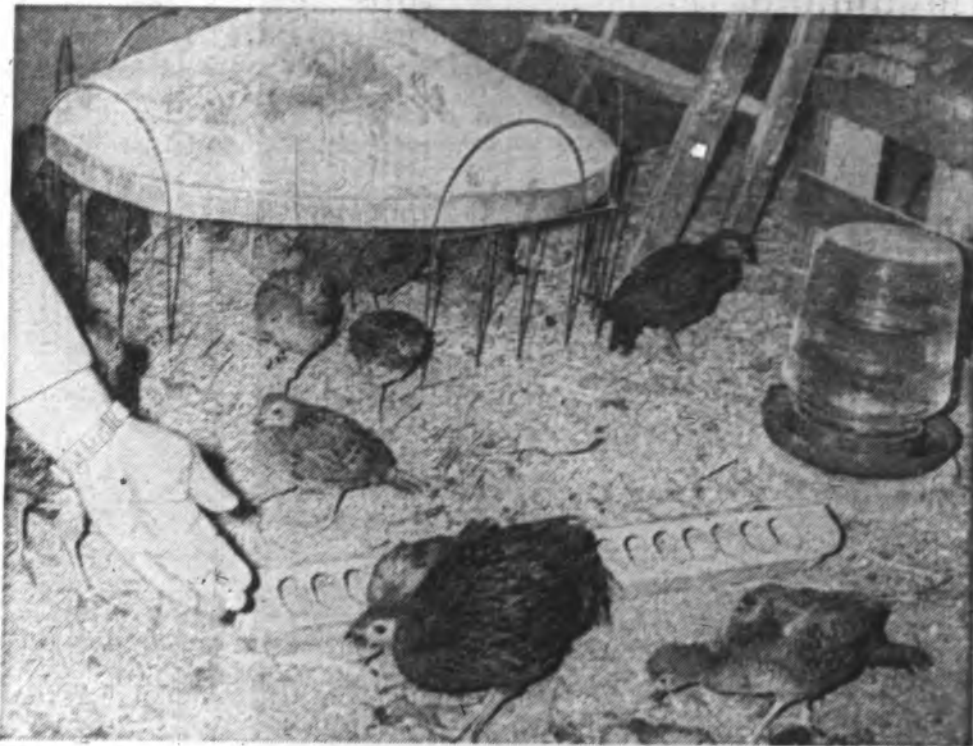

Mr. Miller has learned a lot during his five years as a breeder. The American Game Bird Co-Operative Federation bulletin stated when the Port Alberni man was named judge: "He is one of Canada's most outstanding game bird breeders, and because of his extensive knowledge and experience in the fancy, he will also make an outstanding judge."

He was referred to as a dedicated breeder who is interested in helping to preserve the game birds of the world in their pure form.

A prominent member of the Federation visited the Millers' farm recently and expressed his amazement at the tameness of the livestock and the beautiful condition of the enclosures.

One of the occupants of the pens is an unfeathered creature, the family cat. He is moved from one pen to another to keep the place mouse-free. He and the rare birds are quite companionable and there seems to be no friction in this experiment with co-existence.

While Mrs. Miller reads and passes on information to Ed and Greg, the youngster has become something of an expert in his own right. When he took his test recently to qualify for a pet-keeper badge, the veterinarian who examined for the Cub Pack said he had learned more about pheasants than he had ever known.

YOUNG OF SEVERAL SPECIES OF RARE PHEASANTS huddle around a brooder.

ED MILLER AND HIS CAT AT FEEDING TIME in the pen occupied by the Brown-Eared Manchurian Pheasants.

One of the rarest breeds of pheasants in the Miller establishment is the Satyr Tragopan. Three years ago, Mr. Miller incubated a number of eggs from his original stock. These young birds will be ready for breeding next year.

This year six more eggs were hatched and the young ones are thriving.

The brown-eared Manchurian, traditionally hard to breed, is a denizen of the Miller backyard farm. The strain is badly inbred and poses a challenge for the breeder. Because of Canadian import restrictions, the birds, bought in Japan, were brought here via England, arriving in good condition and settling down happily in their new home.

The Manchurians and the Java green peafowl are among the birds which seem most attached to their owner. When Ed Miller enters a pen, they will come to eat from his hand and will follow him as long as he is in the enclosure.

There are some spectacular breeds in these pens. The Siamese fireback is a brilliant pheasant. The Soemmering's copper pheasant are as colorful as sunset over water.

Humes' bartailed pheasants are well established on the bird farm. One of the flock, a hen, was wild caught in Burma close to 15 years ago.

DEEPSEA SHIP HEADS FOR PULP CARGO AT GOLD RIVER

THE WEST COAST SHIPS

The ships of Vancouver Island's west coast are working ships. Except for a few sports fishermen during the summer, there are not many pleasure boats in the area, but there are innumerable working vessels, ranging from deep-sea freighters to dugout canoes.

All through the year, summer and winter alike, the west coast ships go about their business in all weathers. The wind may be screaming down the inlets and the rain coming horizontally, or the dense Pacific fog may be blotting out the shoreline, but it makes no difference — the work of the ships goes on as usual.

Machinery and provisions must be taken to remote logging camps, barges must be towed, fish must be caught for the market, people must be carried from one point to another along the coast, and lumber and pulp must start on their long journey across the sea.

It is a way of life that has its own reward, a reward not always apparent to the onlooker and practically never mentioned by the inarticulate individuals who man the ships. But it is shared by them all, and consists of a feeling of satisfaction and pride in a hard job of work well done.

MONEY'S POOL . . . on Stamp River

By ERIC SISMEY

In 1943 I obtained Roderick Haig-Brown's Western Angler published in two volumes by the Derrydale Press in 1939. My copy, No. 768 of the 950 sets printed, has, like the others, become a collector's item. It refreshed many fading memories of Campbell River and Buttle Lake enough to convince me that I must go back as soon as war restrictions ended.

When I found Haig-Brown's River Never Sleeps in 1946 I read more about Campbell River and Buttle Lake. And there was something new. I had never heard of greased line fishing nor of Money's Pool on the Stamp. Before long I found a copy of Greased Line Fishing by Jock Scott, which had long been out of print and the more I read the more determined I became that I must try it one day.

In August 1946 after tyee fishing at Comox, my son, Charles, and I joined the Tyee Club at Port Alberni where I have been a member ever since. Over the next several years tyee and coho fishing at Comox, Qualicum, Campbell River and Port Alberni kept me busy first through the light tackle, 30-pound line test, class and then through 2-6 and 20 pound test.

At Port Alberni again in mid-August 1951 the late Fred White invited me to accompany him to Money's Pool. And while I had often fished the pool below the gorge in Stamp Falls Park, which is shared by swimmers and fish, I had never been to Money's.

We paused at the top of the high bank where the general's little fishing hut once stood. From there I gazed along the tree shaded pool which stretched to a little beyond where the Ash and the Stamp mingle. The water was not clear, it had rained the day before, but the simple beauty of the pool so delighted me that I have returned, if only to take a look, year after year.

At poolside, when Fred put his two-handed, 15-foot Hardy together I learned something new once again. Standing on the bank he was able to spey-cast, to an unbelievable distance while I struggled, hip deep in the current, with my shorter stick. But there were no steelhead in the pool that day, at least we did not find them and another two years passed before I saw Fred take one of the summer run while my score sheet was still unmarked. And two more years rolled by before I found conditions right for a trial with a greased line.

In the meantime the Silaflex Company of Southern California had developed and was selling a new line of quality fiberglass rods under the name Medallion; one of the series was 10 feet long. Through a friend I purchased a two-piece blank which I fashioned into a steelhead rod; one which I felt quite sure would be just right for greased line fishing.

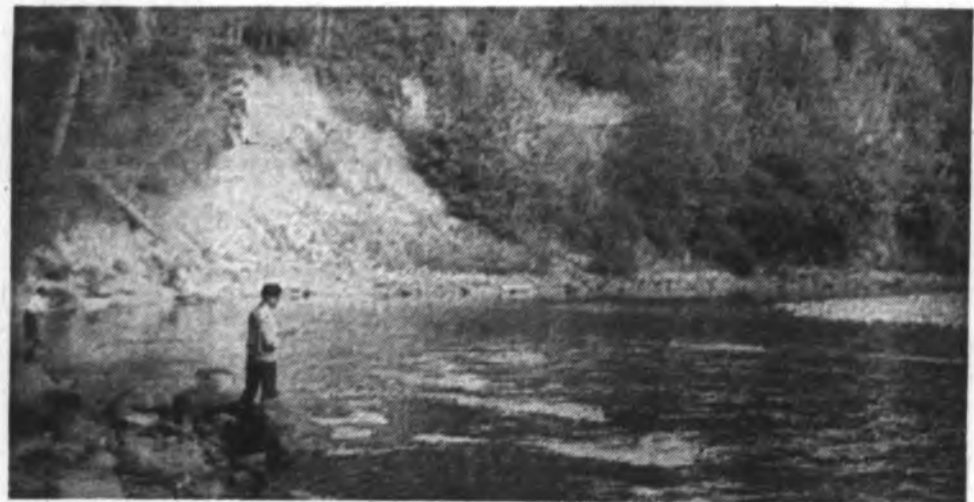

When I visited Money's Pool in August 1957 it was low and the water clear. And perhaps because the 21st was my birthday I did everything just right. As I worked through the pool with the tip of my rod held low, pointing to the fly, by mending the slack properly so that the Blue Charm fly swam without tell-tale drag I saw a fish rise to take the hook which buried its point in the corner of the steelhead's mouth as the pull of the line set the hook. It was not a large fish, a bit more than five pounds, but had it been 50 I could not have been more pleased.

I was glad to have made no mistakes. I had followed the book and everything had gone as planned. But rather than take too much credit it would be better to write: "Everything went as hoped."

I did not visit Money's again until August, 1959. This time I was disappointed, not in the pool itself, but because there were several fishing with spinning gear baited with egg-clusters or hardware. Not a one was using a fly. I thought perhaps I could find quiet on the Ash but there were cluster fishermen at Moran's and the Wolf Creek pools. Since that day on subsequent visits there are always spin fishermen who leave no opportunity to use the greased line. I still go to Money's every year to take another look. But I do not fish.

When I return to the Port Alberni Marina during my tyee fishing holidays there is always someone waiting around the cleaning trough for skeins of salmon eggs. And since I consider Money's Pool fly fishing water I make very certain that they never get salmon eggs from me.

George Northey Has Answers

By BETTY AMOS

Want to know about the salal packing business — or picking huckleberry — or the Coy Cup intermediate hockey champs? Or, perhaps you are curious about softball associations — or organ music. George Northey of Powell River can talk to you about all these things and more besides. And, at 77 years, he knows most of the folk in and around Powell River and a good few who live on Texada Island and the northern part of Vancouver Island.

He knows them from his days as a clerk in the building department of the, then, Powell River Paper Company's plant; and he has got to know many more people as the accountant for the Regal Hockey Club and the treasurer of the softball association. For years he's been the organist in the Anglican Church of St. David in Powell River. And, for the past nine years (since he retired from the plant) he has been the local agent for the Unemployment Insurance Commission. In this latter capacity he helps persons complete and file their claims for unemployment insurance.

The 'office' George maintains for his insurance and accountancy work is a small building directly behind his own home on Westview Avenue in Powell River. It is surrounded by fruit trees and is approached by a path from the side gate, leading immediately off the sloping street which looks down on the harbor. He can talk privately to anyone who needs his special services. On an average he figures about 800 people in the district file claims for unemployment insurance each year. His remuneration for the help he gives is $1 a registered claim.

It is easy to see why a man who is helping people claim unemployment insurance would be up-to-date on the business picture.

He knows when workers at the open pit lime operations near Blubber Bay are busy; or whether the demand for salal or huckleberry (the evergreens which are widely used in the preparation of funeral wreaths) is up or down; or how often ships from Japan are loading iron ore at Gilles Bay.

Yes... it doesn't take much figuring to see why George Northey is a fund of information on the ups and downs of industry in his district, but what did surprise us was that this snowy-topped, twinkling oldster was so hepped on hockey and baseball schedules. When he confessed that he had been helping the league officials map their financial strategy and work out their income taxes the light began to dawn.

He speaks with particular pride about the Powell River Regals who won the Coy Cup in the 1966-67 season to become the intermediate champs for B.C. But, he was forced to admit that they lost it the following season when Quesnel beat them in the finals. Camox is expected to come into the Pacific Coast Hockey League this coming season. At present teams from the Island are the mainstays of the league with Nanaimo, and Alberni linked up with Powell River.

Since he looks after the books George can easily recite attendance figures for home games. "We had 17,000 people turn out for games last season," he reports. "One game we totalled 449 spectators," he said. "But, overall our attendance was down from some other season. In 1955 we had nearly 29,000 out for games in the local arena."

As we looked through old records for hockey and softball and examined a file of press clippings, an interesting item came to light. It was a story about the cathedral in Truro, England. A question about the significance of this brought forth the information that George Northey had been a choir boy in this same magnificent cathedral when he was 'a mere boy' in the pleasant city on the south coast of England. Cornwall was the Northey family home. George left his home in 1920 and immigrated to Canada. He came almost directly to British Columbia and settled in Powell River in 1925.

There he married a school teacher and raised a family of two, a son and daughter, who are also residents of Powell River.

Every Sunday, without fail, you can find George Northey on the organ bench in the Church of St. David. And, if you are lucky, you might also find him — as we did — on a Wednesday practicing for the following weekend services. He plays with a strength and vigor which belies his 77 years. And, the experience of many years permits him to play with or without the music, now.

Those who seek his help on business will learn that he 'keeps office hours planned to suit his clients best'. That is, every week day in the morning until noon, and from 5 to 6 in the afternoon. "So folks can stop in on their way home if they wish to," he notes.

We asked: "Have you thought about retiring?" To which this colorful, helpful man answered, "Well, I was retired — eight years ago. These are my spare-time jobs we're discussing now."

We left wondering, how many men at 77 find as many useful things to do with their 'spare time.'

She was brought from Germany with two males and is the mother of a growing flock.

Eggs in the incubator recently included three of the Amherst pheasant, of which there are few of pure strain left in existence. The first pair of the breed to come out of southeast Asia was a gift to Lady Amherst in 1838.

Some of the other rare birds in the Miller pens are the Himalaya impeyan, Temminck Tragopan, Germain's peacock pheasant, Edwards, Elliotts and Federation golden. The Malaya fireback (Vellota) is another spectacular bird and the whole effect is one of contrast and order.

Mr. Miller has had such success with his incubator and the brooders that he has been able to help other breeders increase their stock. He has given Elliotts Java green and Humes to the Co-Op Federation Centre at Salt Lake City and has given a pair of his rare birds to the Calgary Zoo.

Just recently he decided to turn some of the hardier types loose in the countryside of the Alberni Valley and pheasant hunters this fall may be surprised when they bring down some brilliant specimens. Perhaps they would pause to think if they knew that a pair, imported, could be valued at more than $350.

Mainstay of the diet of the birds, both adult and young, is the meal worm. Mr. Miller imports the food from California by the tens of thousands and watches his flock gobble them up.

THOUGHT FOR FOOD

Ready or not, the school bell tolls . . . six-year-olds have taken their first step out of their mother's hearts into a world of new activities and new experiences. Other age groups have gone cheerfully back to school . . . children don't hate school any more. Come fall they are quite ready to trade a tired mother for a well-rested teacher. Toward the end of summer vacation, as every parent knows, a child comes more and more frequently to the restless "what will I do now, Mum," stage. For most of them the beginning of another school year, with its new experiences, new friends and a new challenge is a welcome change. The few who mutter that they'd rather stay home are just flaunting a little bravado.

School again . . . and that means lunches, so that is what we are going to talk about today. Packing lunch box means day in and day out, is a real challenge.

If you give these meals as much thought as you do other meals of the day you can certainly take it for effort. The daily routine of packing lunches is no mean job. However there is considerable satisfaction in providing an interesting and nourishing lunch.

Junior and high school students as a whole are not too keen on carrying lunches. They may be weight conscious or complexion conscious and their lunches will reflect this. This age group would prefer its lunches packed in disposable containers. Younger children are not averse to carrying the conventional lunch box with vacuum, but it is the little tots who are really enthusiastic about lunch in a box. The gayer the box the better for the whole idea is a novelty and they love it. This is the lunch box that usually comes home empty.

Regardless of age lunches should include a protein item, bread or bread substitute, fresh raw vegetable or salad greens, fruit and a sweet. Soup, milk, orange or tomato juice will vary the beverage. Make finger foods of as many items as possible, wrap everything separately, include a gay paper napkin and no sloppy food. Buy a bundle of bamboo skewers and make up kabobs occasionally, these can be savories or sweets. Wrapped in clear handy-wrap they look particularly interesting.

First we'll put the spotlight on the sandwich . . . with so many possible combination of foods one could go for days without repeating a filling. The bread too should be varied . . . here again there is a great choice. Besides white and whole wheat there are the crispy Italian and French loaves, there is pumpernickel and rye and don't forget the raisin bread. Fresh bread is easy to slice, thick or thin if kept in the freezer overnight. Always spread the butter or margarine right to the edges of the bread.

Here is a week's lunch box suggestions . . .

MONDAY . . . hot tomato juice or soup. Sandwich of whole wheat bread, chopped corned beef, prepared mustard and crumbled potato chips. Chips give the sandwich a nice crunch. Crisp pieces lettuce hearts and deviled egg wrapped separately. Cookies.

TUESDAY . . . milk. Hamburger or wiener bun with slices of meat loaf and pickle relish. A whole tomato quartered, a small box of raisins and a cup cake.

WEDNESDAY . . . fruit juice. Raisin bread spread with blended butter and cream cheese and chopped peanuts. A deviled egg, an orange and cookies.

THURSDAY . . . hot soup. Three-layered sandwich . . . first layer, chopped egg mixed with enough mayonnaise to hold it together, next layer 3 crisp bacon strips. Third layer a slice of Swiss cheese. Celery curls and carrot sticks. Thin sugar cookies.

FRIDAY . . . cold tomato juice. Oatmeal or rye bread with flaked salmon and mayonnaise. Green salad in a plastic container and chocolate brownies for dessert.

Other suggestions for sandwich fillings . . . sliced Swiss cheese and unpeeled apple slices. Brush apple with lemon juice to prevent discoloring.

Chopped hard cooked egg and chopped wiener combined with mayonnaise.

Peanut butter, mashed banana and crisp crumbled bacon.

Peanut butter, grape jelly and crumbled bacon.

Creamed cheese, chopped ripe olives and chopped walnuts.

Chopped cooked chicken, chopped celery combined with cranberry sauce.

SCHOOL LUNCH BOX

Shrimp, crab or tuna, chopped celery and mayonnaise.

Baked beans mashed and mixed with chopped ham and chili sauce.

Toasted sesame seeds mixed with the butter is nice for crunchy sandwich. Crashed potato chips (not too finely crushed) add a nice texture to a sandwich. Instead of flat sandwiches make roll-ups for a change . . . many of the same fillings can be used. Cut crust from bread and flatten a bit with a rolling pin before spreading the filling. Fasten with a bright plastic pick.

Another idea is to roll a slice of cheese and one of meat together and put inside a wiener bun. Next time you are making pastry, make enough extra for some little meat turnovers . . . use chopped left over cooked meat, a little onion chopped fine and a bit of gravy. Season well. Place a spoonful on half a 4-inch pastry square, fold cornerwise and press edges together with a fork. Or you could make meat tarts in muffin pans. Bake in a hot 425 deg. F. oven until golden.

Always include some raw vegetable finger food in each lunch. Wrap this separately. Small boxes of raisins; foil packages of dates, prunes, dried apricots or a chocolate bar all add goodness and interest. Dried fruit like dates can be made non sticky by rolling them in sugar. Demarara sugar is particularly good.

TRAGIC PASSAGE OF HERA LEFT QUESTIONS UNANSWERED

By T. W. PATERSON

"Dead, dying, crazed and crazy, weak, tottering and famishing, is the story told of the nearly 200 passengers of the schooner Hera, which has arrived . . . from Cape Nome this morning.

"Like a thief in the night, or a sheep-killing dog, afraid to face the light of day with honest men looking on, the piratical-looking craft crept past the city, silently and without noise, and cast her anchor in the upper bay, close in against the foul-smelling old fertilizer factory."

HERA'S HUNDREDS HAD BRAVED KILLING SNOWS OF KLONDIKE in search of gold, to suffer again aboard the ill-starred hull-ship.

This was the exciting story which intrigued Colonist readers, Oct. 26, 1900. An incredible tale of suffering and death which outraged the entire Pacific Northwest; and leaves readers of today marvelling at the hidden dangers of going to sea 70 years ago.

Like the incredible saga of ill-starred liner Clara Nevada, recently told in these pages, that of the schooner Hera is almost unbelievable today. Also, it is all too true.

The Blue Star Line's ancient workhorse had sailed from Nome a month before, Seattle bound with 200 passengers, many of them returning from the goldfields. For $50 each, the unsuspecting prospectors were guaranteed "the grub was all right, plenty of it, and wholesome and good." Sleeping accommodations "would be rough, but otherwise everything would be perfect."

Instead of an uneventful, if uncomfortable, passage, or at worst one marred by the odd storm, the unhappy company was to experience privation and hardship. For two of Hera's haunted hundreds, the voyage home would mean death.

Hera was not long at sea, slowly quaking her way southward, when came the first crisis: Food was running low. Then began a trail-erical month which defies comprehension 70 years later.

But days out of port, "meat, sugar and butter disappeared from the bill of fare. The meat consisted of salt horse and a limited supply of canned mutton. The supply of dried fruits seemed to consist from the first of only one box of dried peaches, enough to supply the table with peaches three times and prunes twice. As to potatoes, some of the passengers say that not a potato was seen aboard the ship.

"The only thing there seemed to be plenty of was flour. The ship never ran out of that, and the last four days the bill of fare was bread made from sourdough and coffee.

"The salt horse was counted a very poor quality by some of the passengers interviewed. Of this there was enough by rationing it to last up to four days ago, when the last of that commodity was gone. Then it was flour and water."

Even worse, whiled survivors, only providence had saved them from "water famine," heavy showers during the final days ending a critical shortage of that precious commodity.

Twenty days out, young Sacramento passenger J. S. Ryan died, apparent victim of malnutrition—and other horrors. Days earlier, he had been "well to all appearances, and was on his feet up to two days before he died. The overruling aboard, ill ventilation, lack of necessities, forced exposure, soon brought on a crisis which carried him off."

Forced to tend for himself, Ryan had become weaker and weaker. Just before death, delirious, he had wandered onto the windwept deck in his bare feet. Hours later, he was gone. The body was stored 48 hours, then wrapped in sweeping the nine-man cortège off its feet and committed to the deep.

The funeral had almost become disaster when, at the moment of launching the coffin, a great wave surged over the schooner's bow, sweeping the nine-man cortège off its feet and almost over the side. Luckily, all escaped with a bruising.

G. A. Wiseman, "an intelligent man from San Francisco," heaped full blame for Ryan's demise on Hera's command, claiming the youth succumbed of starvation and neglect.

"The case of George Lumby," raged the Seattle Daily Times, was "similar to that of Ryan. The story of one was the story of the other. None to back after them, becoming weak from lack of nourishing food, then the almost total lack of medicine and absence of all food suitable to the sick, even developed into typhoid fever, which was not long in doing its worst."

Poor Lumby had experienced misfortune from the start of the tragic cruise, being robbed of his $400 stake in Nome just before sailing.

The days had crept by, Hera possibly struggling southward. Reduced to rats, the frightened passengers existed on dry bread and weak coffee. Then there was no more coffee as the water was almost gone.

Finally . . . 50 miles off Cape Flattery the broadened schooner spoke to the vessel Lahoma, informing that craft of her critical condition. Lahoma immediately headed for port to send aid. Long hours later, smoke on the horizon betokened an approaching vessel. To the vast relief of Hera's "famishing and dying" company, the smoke came from two rescue vessels, the tug Sea Lion and the cutter Grant.

Coming alongside, the Grant sent a man aboard to inquire as to Hera's precise condition.

That matter settled, she pulled away to allow the tug alongside. From Sea Lion came a happy sight for the worried passengers—food! Meat, potatoes and sundry supplies were hastily dumped on Hera's deck, then Sea Lion rigged a bawline. Twenty-four hours later, she hauled the schooner into Seattle.

During the long haul, passengers had enjoyed little of the emergency provisions. One meal, "although they had been famishing for over a week," the first day, another the last. Between excursions they had requested coffee and bread but had been refused.

When at last Hera anchored off the fertilizer factory, "like a thief in the night, or a sheep-killing dog," as outraged editorials put it, Capt. J. L. Warren slipped away on the Sea Lion, leaving his passengers to make shore, half a mile distant, as best they could. This was soon accomplished by a small fleet of local craft.

The whole voyage had been hell, said passenger R. Ritchie. "We left Nome Sept. 26 with 175 passengers, and were given on the start two meals a day.

"We soon ran out of sugar, as there did not appear to have been any supply at all. At Umanak Pass the captain said there were provisions enough for 10 days, but this was not borne out by the facts. The lack of proper food soon began to tell on the passengers. One man soon died and was buried at sea. Another followed. Another man dropped from sheer hunger and was carried below and put to bed. He simply fainted away from weakness, and when he came to he could not walk.

"One man so crazed and weak from lack of food and nourishment was kept lying on the dining table until mealtime, when he was placed temporarily somewhere else. Yesterday evening there was only bread and coffee left. Had it not rained the last few days, men would have died of thirst. The ship had practically been out of water for a week. One man has gone crazy from lack of provisions, and is under guard all the time aboard."

Of the 200 carefree prospectors who had embarked aboard a month before, few now were in condition to immediately enjoy their wealth from the northern goldfields. Some were even too weak to carry their dust ashore. Peter Anderson of Chicago had boarded Hera "a well man, happy in the thought that he would soon be home. This

Another embittered survivor, named McKinney, swore he knew of at least a dozen men so weakened by hunger they could no longer look after themselves.

Poor Ryan and Lamb, Frank Newman stormed, were victims of starvation. "Twenty eight days at sea on miserable rations and the last 10 days of the time confined almost entirely to bread, made from sourdough, and coffee could not be considered other than a process of certain starvation to sick men."

To add further weight to Newman's account, the Seattle Times mentioned his success in the North, as he had returned with a respectable stake of gold dust. Just two years before, he had been selling newspapers on Seattle streets. He and his brother enjoyed "the reputation of having been among the brightest and most fashionable boys that ever sold papers in this city," glowed the Times.

Upon recovering from his ordeal, young Newman gave an equally glowing description of the Klondike. "There isn't a poor man aboard the Hera, nor a poor man at Nome. It is the greatest place on earth. A man can pick up gold from the beach anywhere. Nome is a great big place now. When I went there, there was only a house and two or three tents."

The tragic passage of Hera leaves so many unanswered questions today. How could such a disaster occur, even among the rag-tag goldrush fleet of ancient bottoms and floating coffins? When passengers reached Seattle at last, instead of avenging themselves of Capt. Warren's apparent inhuman conduct, as one would expect, they had very little to say against him. The Nome agent of the Blue Star Line, Ryan, however, would have fared considerably worse had he been available. "It was Ryan who dealt with the passengers at Nome, and made so many promises, every one of which was broken." Maltreated passengers maintained they would have invited that gentleman to a lynching party were he in Seattle.

The true facts of the case would indicate Hera's unhappy hundreds were more the victims of weather than inhumanity. Instead of making port in the usual week, Hera had been kept well offshore by a month of vindictive winds. When at last she raised Cape Flattery, the wind continued its game of cat-and-mouse; "every time they would get close in they were beaten back." The chance meeting with the Lakme proved to be a lifesaver, as Sea Lion had her in port just as another gale arose, which would have held the old schooner prisoner yet again.

The fact remains that, during the frenzied years of the Klondike madness, passengers knew what they were getting into when they boarded most Pacific vessels. They expected poor food and worse accommodation in filthy, rotten and oft-times reeking—and leaking—ships, many of which had been hastily reclaimed from a mudbank for the duration. In their rush to the goldfields, many adventurers even took their chances in homemade rowboats. Remarkably, most even survived the hazardous passage!

Long before her fateful cruise, Hera had been christened a "vessel with a history." And quite a history she had.

Built in Boston in 1869, the 400-ton schooner had early entered the realm of romance and royalty. Sailors seldom stayed with one ship in the heyday of sail, usually changing berths every voyage. Hera was no exception. Crews came and went, as the new schooner jibbed from port to port. Finally came a day when a nondescript individual named George Osborne signed aboard as ordinary seaman, stinging his hammock in the stuffy fore-cabin. When Hera sailed for Australia, none aboard realized they were unwitting participants in a global race against fate.

Steaming to Melbourne, in a desperate bid to beat Hera, were detectives. There was a quest straight from the pages of literature. The Earl of Aberdeen had died, his famous estate passing to his heir. Then came a startling discovery: the new earl was nowhere to be found. Detectives took up the trail, finally learning he had run away to sea, under the name Osborne.

"Advertisements were issued and he was traced from vessel to vessel and to Richmond, Va., where he disposed of his jewelry and watch and a breech-loading rifle, all of which were identified. From Richmond he was followed to a southern port, where it was ascertained that he had shipped before the mast on the schooner Hera bound for Australia."

Thus it was weary detectives met the unsuspecting schooner by launch in Melbourne's outer harbor. Clambering aboard, they eagerly sought out the captain, to ask for the seaman known as George Osborne. The master quietly replied they were too late: Osborne had been lost at sea during the voyage. A search of his effects revealed "abundant evidence that proved George Osborne and the Earl of Aberdeen to be one and the same. The title was accordingly assumed by the next of kin."

From this, poor Hera had sunk to the curse of a hell-ship. Ironically, but two months after her infamous voyage from the north, she met her doom of Chayouart when her cargo of lime caught fire. An interesting insight into the enigmatic Capt. Warren came to light after the exciting newspaper accounts of Hera's blazing finish.

Famous sealer Capt. Victor Jacobson wrote The Colonist that "the report recently published respecting the alleged abandonment of his crew by the captain of the wrecked schooner Hera must have been written by the Colonist's informant in entire ignorance of the facts. The captain was criticized for having himself put off in the one boat, with the lady passenger and two or three others and refusing passage to 13 members of the crew left on the wreck.

"That . . . course was the only sensible one for the captain to take, as to have loaded his little boat more meant certain swamping. When the relief party . . . were (sic) on the way out they met the captain who shouted that if he got his party safely to shore he would return for another (load), but Mr. Jacobson advised him not to do so, as the relief boat was large enough to take all hands, which it did, making the way back with the greatest difficulty, so high was the sea running.

"The captain could not send away a load of men first of all, for they were in such a state of panic that had they got ashore they certainly would not have sent the boat back, as he intended to do at further port of his own life."

Which leaves the tantalizing puzzle: Was Capt. Warren a hero or a heel? Or both? Going to sea was a rough—and strange—business in the good old days!

LAST OF THE CARIBOO ROAD CAMELS.

Those Incredible Cariboo Camels

By CLEMENTINE PYPE

Camel trains on the Cariboo Trail, like clowns on a collapsing stepladder, caused chaos from the start. The first time they set out with supplies for the gold mines in May, 1862, they met a pack train of mules and even before they were in sight, so the story goes, the mules got a sniff of the camels.

A cook who was riding the bell mule was bucked off with all his clattering paraphernalia, the mules stampeded to the three winds of heaven and did every fool thing except climb trees.

"The camel suffers from halitosis and other evidences of lack of personal daintiness," one oldtimer explained, "and this was very objectionable to the other beasts of burden."

It wasn't just the animals that took an instant dislike to the camels. Packers on the road swore the devil was in the two-humped oints. Only the Indians greeted them with a polite "Kishwaya." If mules and horses were stabled within hailing distance of the camels there was so much whinnying and braying all through the night that the camp became a Noah's Ark nightmare and no one got any sleep.

But the lack of love was not entirely one-sided. The camels showed their extreme distaste for everyone and everything connected with the Cariboo. They kicked and they bit. They attacked the other animals, they trampled tents, chewed freight, ate soap and gobbled up shirts hung out to dry. If you stood too near a camel it had the nasty habit of expectorating hay in your face.

The unfortunate camels had good reason to be grumpy. Their feet hurt. Cushion-footed camels were as unsuited to the rock trails and hardpan of the Cariboo as jellyfish on a sidewalk. Drivers, who had a sneaking affection for their charges, concocted boots from canvas and rawhide but those were quickly worn to shreds and useless. The poor creatures' feet were so sore they climbed Pavilion Mountain on their knees.

Every time the camels felt the touch of the wandlike stick which was the order to kneel for loading they set up such a pathetic bleating that a pall of mournfulness settled over the entire camp and everyone was eager to be on the move. But as soon as they met other animals on the rattlesnake grades of the road and along the canyons all travel became chaotic.

One sound or whiff of the howling camels and there was such a braying of mules, neighing of horses and snorting of cayuse ponies with drivers shouting and cursing the maledictious oints that a tangled confusion threatened to send everyone to unnatural deaths. Frightened and angry animals became unmanageable and so many bolted, were injured, or lost their packs that the syndicate which owned the camels was harassed with threats of one damage suit after another.

To add to their worries from litigation and lame animals a further blow hit like an axe. Irate packers started a petition to send to Governor Douglas requesting "The Drumsbury Express," as they dubbed it, be banned.

Then shattering calamity. As one camel train plodded along a narrow ledge near Pavilion Creek a camel committed the unpardonable sin of toppling down the canyon wall with a full load of Scotch whisky.

That was too much. The syndicate gave up. After wrestling for more than 12 months against impossible difficulties they admitted they were licked and abandoned the whole grandiose scheme.

Originally it had been Frank Laumeister's brainwave. He had seen Indians and their squaws, ox carts, horse-drawn wagons and mule trains struggling into the Cariboo and realized that freighting supplies to goldminers was big business. But some more profitable means of transport was needed and he thought he knew the answer to that one.

Indians carried 100 to 150 pounds and Indian women 50 to 100 pounds—one squaw was seen carrying a 50-pound sack of flour, on top of that a box of candles and sitting on top of the box a child. So far mules had proved the best beasts of burden, but they cost around $450 a pair and a mule could carry 300 pounds of freight only 15 miles a day. With feed for them at six to seven cents a pound they were expensive. Laumeister said he could better kill by a long shot.

"Why not camels?" he put the startling proposition to Adam Heffly and Henry Ingraham. He said they'd been used in the Californian goldrush of '49. Camels could transport 1,000 pounds of freight 30 to 40 miles a day and travel without water for a week. In the Cariboo they could forage on sagebrush—that cost nothing.

The three men formed a syndicate. According

Atlantic Lobsters Find Happy West Coast Home

EARLY INDICATIONS are encouraging that Atlantic lobsters transplanted to Pacific Coast could flourish in B.C. waters. Here Federal Fisheries Minister Jack Davis, right, learns all about them from Dr. Ray Ghelardi, chief of the west coast lobster transplant experiment, who says the lobsters do moult, grow and mate here, but adds much more study is required before lobsters are planted on west coast for commercial harvest. (Alec Merriman photos.)

LOBSTER STUDIES are being carried out at isolated seven-tenths of a mile long and half-mile wide Fatty Basin at the head of Unsworth Inlet in Barkley Sound on Vancouver Island's west coast. A steady population of up to 4,000 lobsters, some born in the Basin, is now established.

called Tom and one The Lady. Twenty years later children who had learned the knack of touching behind the fore-knees to make them kneel were still clambering aboard for rides. The last Cariboo camel leaned against a tree and died in 1905.

Some people say the curse of the camels sent Frank Laumelster to his death. He fell from a San Francisco Bay ferry and was drowned. And there are still residents in the vicinity of the legislative buildings who vow they sometimes hear the glinty pads of a knely camel and hear salt as they fly down the streets of Victoria.

Sunday, September 15, 1957

to their estimate could reach $60,000 the first season alone. Their agent was rushed down to San Francisco where he paid $200 each for 22 Bactrian camels that had been shipped in by Otto Zaehle via a Siberian port from the Manchurian province of Amur. All the camels were seasick on the journey north and one died, but 22, in poor condition, arrived at Esquimalt aboard the steamship Hermann in April, 1902, and caused more excitement than a circus.

The British Columbian for May 7, 1902, reporting on the camels said: "Their appearance on the wharf caused a great wonder and a 'hy-you waw-waw' amongst the Indians who seemed in great perplexity to understand the precise nature of the extraordinary looking animals." Years later a Mrs. York described the landing. "The whole town turned out—everybody and the cook," she said, "to see the strange beasts of the desert that were soon to be sacrificed to the Golden Calf."

For a time the shaggy-haired animals, cousins of the llama, were corralled at the Halfway House in charge of "a live Turk" then taken to Victoria and kept on a vacant lot at the corner of Douglas and Johnson Streets. The Colonist reported that people poked fun and sticks and one youth tormented a baby camel by puffing its tail and then hugging it almost to strangulation. When the mother could endure the indignity no longer she showered the boy with two gallons of dirty water squirted through her nostrils.

The animals' next move was to New Westminster where they were transported aboard the Enterprise and from there they went by barge to Port Douglas towed by the Flying Dutchman. One dam had to be left in Victoria because she had just given birth and was not strong enough to make the journey. As no one knew what to do with her she was taken to Beacon Hill Park where she and her colt were left to roam among the Gary oaks and fields of blue Camas.

Mr. James Anderson, a minister of agriculture who lived in the vicinity of the legislative buildings, remembered her wandering in the district for many months. Other residents saw her on the Cadboro Bay Road and some complained of being scared out of their wits by monsters appearing from behind bushes in Beacon Hill Park.

Twenty-one travel-dejected camels reached Pemberton Meadows to recuperate and were fitted with improvised pack saddles, then each laden with a trial load of 350 pounds. By May 28 the British Colonist reported with a doubtful note of optimism: "So far they have proved a success." A year later the report was still hopeful: "The big one, Barnum, carried 800 pounds of flour, the others 400 to 500. They beat ox, wagon, mule or caynosh ponies. They will eat a pair of pants or a bar of soap."

Yet by the end of that second summer the syndicate withdrew the ill-fated camel trains from the road and put the animals up for sale. But somehow the bottom had dropped out of the camel market. A few were sold to a circus in the United States who paid $35 for one—perhaps Big Barnum, named after the American showman then at the height of his fame.

Some were let loose near Thompson River to astonish strangers like Viscount Milton and Dr. Chumley, those first transcontinental tourists, who noted in their diary: "Passed a magnificent camel grazing alongside the road."

Six were used for logging and a stage driver named Walker achieved the impossible by teaming one with a mule to pull a plough. Another became a pack animal at the Kootenai mines.

Near 117 Mile House a mound marked the grave of eight that perished in a blizzard. One was shot for knocking down fences. One which Alexander, a brother of Chief Chilikitsie, had traded for a mule was shot by the Nicola Indians because it bit. Another was shot near 150 Mile House by John Morris, a Victoria contractor, who said he mistook it for a grizzly.

The popular saloon and restaurant run by Adler and Barry at 150 Mile House tried serving camel meat, but too many of their clients remembered the scent of ill-conditioned camels. At Kamloops the Hudson's Bay Company store paid $60.00 for 404 pounds of the meat but it was not popular with their customers. Near Fort Steele settlers butchered a camel one hard winter and they declared the meat to be delicious when fried.

The more fortunate creatures were treated as curiosities and their thick winter coats sheared every year for stuffing pillows and mattresses. Henry Ingram, a member of the syndicate, kept two camels on his ranch at Westwood near Grande Prairie which became popular pets. Canadian Writers Give Candid Opinion of the United States

This Will Be Most Talked-of Book of Year

Reviewed by E. D. WARD-HARRIS

The New Romans, a collection of essays and poems by Canadians who were invited to state their candid opinions of the United States, contains both first-class and inferior writing. But this I predict: It will be the most talked-of book of the year in North America.

The New Romans—an excellent and apt title, by the way—is a refreshingly different type of publication in that it departs from the customary trade and diplomatic piffle dished out so liberally to Canadians by "publish-or-perish" academics and cynical politicians.

Instead, egged on by publisher Mel Hurtig and editor A. W. Purdy, contributors—in the main—have cast aside blandness and caution and expressed themselves both emotionally and logically in biased terms.

In short, we are permitted to read openly what, I suspect, many thinking Canadians are saying privately.

The majority of the contributors are anti-American. Some temper their bias with the "some of my best friends..." approach, but most do not even bother with that proviso. BUT THIS IS NOT A HATE BOOK. Far from it. Most of the writers, after agonized soul-searching, are patently distressed by the way they feel.

The 50 contributors to The New Romans represent a cross-section of the brighter minds in Canadian literature, academic and journalistic fraternities, and it is this fact, plus the astonishing similarity of sentiment, that makes this book important.

Far and away the most interesting and telling contributions are those written by Henry Belissel, poet, editor and academic, and C. W. Gonick, editor of Canadian Literature and a member of the Department of Political Science at the University of Manitoba.

In brilliantly reasoned essays, both show that Canada is already a satellite within the regional economy of the U.S. and that Canadian governments have no alternative but to introduce measures which parallel the policy initiatives of Washington.

Both writers deplore the brutal and senseless war in Vietnam and stress that, far from being an aberration, it is deliberate and that there will be many more Vietnams.

Their theses are based on the remark of British historian Arnold Toynbee, who has said of America, "... (she) is no longer the inspirer and leader of the world revolution ... (but the) leader of a world-wide anti-revolutionary movement of vested interests. She now stands for what Rome stood for."

And what did Rome stand for? This is how Henry Belissel concludes his essay:

... The parallels between Rome (the final phase of classical culture) and America (the final phase of European culture) are uncanny. (Oswald) Spengler (in The Decline of the West) shows that Rome was cerebral, irreligious, factual, journalistic, analytical, technological, hedonistic, cosmopolitan. So is America.

"Rome was preoccupied with size and quantity and performed colossal construction feats (roads and buildings). The same is true of America ... Rome was an imperialistic nation; the whole classical world came to fear the break and claws of the eagles from Capitol Hill.

"We have a new nest of eagles now on a new Capitol Hill, and the world trembles. Internally corrupt and externally overextended, Rome's empire crumbled, beginning at the faraway perimeters. Is Vietnam the turning point for the U.S.?"

The brutal business in Vietnam and its natural concomitant, the violence, corruption and cynical disregard for minorities and political morality within the United States, plus the invidious economic and mental enslavement of Canada by Big Brother, weigh heavily on the minds of most of the contributors to The New Romans.

The consensus is not so much anti-American as anti-policy and thinking epitomized by Messrs. Johnson, Rusk, Nixon, Reagan and others who are seen as willingly doing the bidding of the Pentagon, the CIA and the financial empires.

The approach to the main theme varies widely. Farley Mowat, in a brilliantly written piece in the form of a letter to his son, has soaked his typewriter ribbon in virginal; political writer Peter Newman, who as a boy was a refugee from Nazi terror, reveals that he has refused many lucrative offers from the U.S., because nothing would induce him to live under their system.

The theme is taken up by a host of others, including Andre Major, the Quebec poet ("My soul is not for sale."); Alden Nowlan ("Lyndon Johnson could give lessons to Machiavelli."); Stephen Vizinczey ("The cruelties of power are the rage of impotence."); Laurier LaPlante, James M. Minifie, Mordecai Richler and others echo the same tune.

Particularly effective, possibly because they are quieter and more subtle in their approach, are the sensitive Margaret Laurence and my favorite Canadian poet, Dorothy Livesay, whose poignant contribution is in marked contrast to the vicious and puny effort of Irving Layton.

All essays and poems in this book are not anti-American; on the contrary, some are just the reverse, but these Yankophilism, by their lame efforts to defend the indefensible, succeed only in further damaging the image they seek to glorify. The worst offender is novelist Hugh Garner, whose wishy-washy apologia, titled I Love Americans, is unconvincing and sympathetic.

Personally, I regret the fact that the bulk of contributors were so blinded by bias that they could see only one side of the coin. The New Romans would be more impressive and carry more weight if mention had been made of:

- The courage of people such as Senator William Fulbright, a man Cicero would have been proud to support.

- The current healthy ferment in the universities, and the Eugene McCarthy crusade for sanity.

- The opportunistic Canadians who have sold themselves for a mess of pottage—the people who have gaily replaced members of the U.S. intelligentsia who, sickened by the political climate, fled the field of battle instead of remaining to fight.

However, omissions notwithstanding, The New Romans is one book you should not miss. It's going to be the talk of the country.

Dangerous Assignment

Rock Baby is the code-name for a sophisticated highly-secret electronic device designed to detect and report underground atomic explosions. The British secret service, with American connivance, parachutes several of these devices into remote regions behind the Iron Curtain.

One Rock Baby, dropped in Yugoslavia, reports regularly for months, becomes silent for two weeks and then mysteriously comes back into action. It becomes essential to find out whether it has been tampered with.

Scientist Giles Yeoman is pressured into undertaking the dangerous assignment.

Readers of Martin Woodhouse's first novel, Tree Frog, know what to expect. For those who missed that one, it is only necessary to say that young Woodhouse is one of those rare writers with an infinite potential.

He manages to combine the originality, inventiveness and characterization of an Alistair Maclean with the technical expertise of a Nigel Balchin and, for good measure, to add delightful dead-pan humor and a charming air of world-weary cynicism.

Well constructed, tautly written, Rock Baby is fast-paced, amusing and deceptively simple—hall marks of a talented author who is destined, like Maclean and Balchin, to become a big name in the light novel field.—E.D.W.H.

A Dog's Life

"In the present state of the world it is difficult not to write satire." So wrote Juvenal, master satirist, almost 2,000 years ago, and so, in effect, wrote Mikhail Bulgakov, Soviet satirist, after the Bolshevik Revolution. Bulgakov, who died in 1940 at the age of 48, lived through the revolution, shared its hopes, tasted its disappointments, and expressed his feelings in satires, the most biting of which is this short novel written in 1925. It says a great deal about Soviet sensitivity that it has never been published in its native land, though Bulgakov's other writings are admired.

Bulgakov had little patience with stupidity and no tolerance at all for brutality, both of which he witnessed in ample measure. Satire being the only mode of criticism open to him, he grasped it with both hands. The story centres about a brilliant surgeon and the mongrel dog he uses for a transplant experiment. The surgeon transfers the brain and glands of a recently dead man into the dog. The effect is to humanize the dog; he learns to walk upright, to speak and behave with raw human crudity.

The veriest dullard can discern what the author is really saying. The dog is the Russian nation exiled from time immemorial by tyrants and autocrats. The surgeon is the Bolshevik Party (or, if you will, its leader, Lenin). The effect of "rejuvenation" (for which read "revolution") is to brutalize the patient.

As the dog regains his health it becomes not human but humanoid — so much so that the doctor is disgusted with the results of his handiwork. In this fashion Bulgakov obliquely expresses his disenchantment with the new Soviet state and with what its leaders and bureaucrats were doing to the Russian people.

In a typical passage (and there are many of these), the surgeon remembers to a friend at dinner: "If you care about your digestion, my advice is — don't talk about Bolshevism or medicine at the table. And, God forbid — never read Soviet newspapers before dinner ... Patients whom I specially made read Pravda lost weight." Can you imagine that being printed even in today's Russia?

There is, of course, a more serious side to this seemingly far-fetched, lighthearted fantasy. The debasement of Soviet men reached a climax in the Stalinist era which Bulgakov could not have anticipated, but which flows naturally enough from his thesis. Being a novelist, he was able to correct the situation by making the surgeon turn his Frankenstein back into a dog, but it is going to take a great deal longer to normalize the minds of the Russian people. — J. One of the big attractions to visitors is the Link and Pin Museum, a hobby project of Mr. and Mrs. Glen Duncan, third generation Saywardites. Under the stone roof of their big building can be found the entire history of the valley, from Indian days through logging, pioneering and farming.

The talented artist, Mrs. Hetty Frederickson, is doing her best to put Sayward on the map in a unique way. Her ambition is to convert it to the Valley of a Thousand Faces, with her delightful portraits painted on slabs of wood and nailed to trees. The Armishaw Gateway might be

AMERICA'S COMING WORLD ROLE

Reviewed by JOHN BARKHAM

In The American Empire Amaury de Riencourt postulates on a global scale the case presented for Europe by Jean-Jacques Servan-Schreiber in his recent The American Challenge. Both Frenchmen are in effect saying the same thing; namely, that the United States is in process of extending its economic, social and cultural hegemony to Europe and the world.

Where Servan-Schreiber tends to view the European prospect with alarm, de Riencourt greets the global spread of American power with equanimity. He has, after all, been proclaiming its imminence for years. In his book, The Coming Caesars, published 11 years ago, he foresaw the United States as the Rome of the modern world with Europe as the fading Greece, a simile widely adopted by other writers since. In the new book de Riencourt raises his sights to envisage America's coming world role.

The result is an extraordinarily stimulating look whether you accept its fundamental thesis or not. De Riencourt rests his case on a solid base of world history, from which his imagination takes off on bold yet logical flights. Given his initial premise that the U.S. is in a Caesarian phase, there is a persuasive inevitability about his subsequent projections:

1. That the U.S. must, willy nilly, inherit the leadership of the British

AMAURY DE RIENCOURT

THE AMERICAN EMPIRE, By Amaury de Riencourt, 194d Press, 317 pp., $7.50.

Commonwealth ("Australia is sinking into the Pacific and a new state is rising which we might call Austerlitz");

2. that the Orient will become "Hawaiianized" ("no reluctantly that Japan cannot resist it");

3. that a North Atlantic Federation will arise with the U.S. as the dominant partner;

4. that the globe will be more or less benevolently run by "the Great Condominium" (i.e., the U.S. and the USSR).

It is at the very least an arguable case, and de Riencourt does the arguing most convincingly, drawing parallels with ancient Greece and Rome wherever possible. The American reader will, however, have his reservations. If the events of the last decade have proved anything at all, it is that the American people are far from Caesarian in spirit.

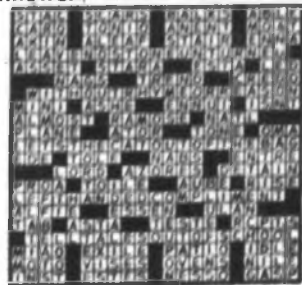

After the misadventure of Vietnam, they would be at best highly reluctant Caesars. "We are not the policemen of the world" is now a widely accepted slogan. Moreover, while it is true, as the author emphasizes, that Presidential powers have grown enormously since the Second World War, a countervailing grandswell has been generated in the Congress to curb them. And whoever heard of a Caesar checkreined by the legislature?

There are, however, relatively minor quibbles. Taking the long view, de Riencourt is more likely to be right than wrong. American power and influence are spreading swiftly around the world, borne not by military conquest but by American economic, technological, managerial and financial know-how. The world today is full of nations seeking to raise themselves to American standards, not the other way round. Inevitably this must produce the type of economic and possibly cultural leadership the author envisages.

It is rarely, indeed, that so lucid and far-sighted a book comes to our attention. Tymnbean in perspective, Gallic in logic, and American in viewpoint, it is a compelling and provocative work that no thoughtful reader should overlook. While most of us concentrate on the obstacles under our noses, Amaury de Riencourt looks far into the future, and what he sees there is immensely exhilarating.

ANSWER TO LAST WEEK'S PUZZLE

BOUQUET FOR TEACHER

By RAY WORMALD

She was a substitute teacher in the "country school" and a couple of boys thought they'd play a prank on her.

It was in the days when taking an apple or some flowers to the teacher was a fairly common practice. In this particular case, the bouquet took the form of a large cluster of skunk cabbage blossoms, and the lads who made the presentation were smug in the thought they were putting something over on the "city slicker" teacher.

The teacher accepted the non-fragrant blossoms with proper surprise and thanks. The givers, we can assume, had difficulty holding back their laughs and chuckles.

So did the teacher. She knew exactly what the floral tribute really was and, after remarking on their fine color and beauty, she "tossed" the donors by placing the bouquet on a small table between their desks.

The boys spent the rest of the day inhaling the "fragrance" of the skunk cabbage.

It was the last time they ever took flowers to the teacher.

The time was 1899, and the place was the original Elk Lake School in Saanich. The little story is one of many recalled by Mrs. Esther Quick, now in her 79th year, who resides at 4512 Wilkinson Road.

Her father, James Rutherford Carmichael, was the first Justice of the Peace in Saanich; and she attended the original little school house at the intersection of Cordova Bay Road and East Saanich Road (now the Patricia Bay Highway).

The school consisted of one classroom in what originally was a private home. Its first teacher was Miss Gladys Butler, now Mrs. M. H. Ludlow, who lives at 6546 West Saanich Road. The second teacher at the school was Miss Blanche Coover.

Attendance at the first Elk Lake School varied from 15 to 25 students — ranging from "primers" 1, 2 and 3 (now known as grades) and through "readers" 4 to 8. The teacher spent busy days switching in and from the little clusters of students which made up various grades — or, as they were then called, primers and readers.

Mrs. Quick remembers the old wood stove which served as the classroom's version of "central heating." Wood for it came from the adjacent forest, and boys took turns locating, chopping and bringing in the kindling and the fuel.

There was no such thing as a janitor. Older boys competed for the job of sweeping the floor, clearing blackboards and generally keeping the classroom neat and tidy. For this they received 50 cents a month.

School hours were from nine in the morning until 3:30; with 10-minute morning recess, an hour for lunch, and a 15-minute recess in the afternoon.

MRS. ESTHER QUICK
... she remembers first little Elk Lake schoolhouse.

Summer holidays started early in July and lasted six weeks.

Mrs. Quick started her schooling in the old (and still standing) North Ward School in Victoria, and went to Elk Lake School home as a grade 4 student in 1899. At that time her family lived in the Cordova Bay area on what is now Parker Avenue, near Finn Road. She walked more than a mile over a rough trail through heavy bush and forest to her classroom.

"We thought nothing of walking then," she said. "Often on a Sunday we would walk six or seven miles to visit friends on Keating Cross Road, enjoy the day, then walk back in the evening."

She remembers many of her classmates of the old Elk Lake classroom. Among them: Bert McKay, Hugh Campbell and his sister Lena, Frank Freehand, Katie McKay, Maude and Reggie Hedley, Joe Frank and his sisters Belle and Lena, Alice Tuset, and Arthur Josue and his sisters Lily and Eva.

The little one-room school served its purpose until late in 1899, at which time a one-room "real" school took its place a short distance up the hill. It was established on property which later was developed as a gravel pit.

As the years unravelled more and more people moved into the scenic wooded area. Time and age finally forced the second Elk Lake school to close its doors forever in the summer of 1966. The building was demolished early this year.

The existing Elk Lake Primary School, a smart-looking three-room building located at 735 Cordova Bay Road was formally opened in September, 1966, with a nice little ceremony.

Attending the event, of course, were school board officials and other interested persons. And special guests for the occasion were several area residents who had been students in the original one-room schoolhouse. Mrs. Quick was among them.

Ninety-one kiddies attended the new school during the last term. The area continues to grow fast, and within a year or so enrolment will jump considerably.

With an eye to the future, Saanich Peninsula school authorities in their upcoming school referendum
